UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT TACOMA

Defendants,

*Proposed

Case No. 3:22-cv-5035-RSL

PROPOSED INTERVENOR-DEFENDANTS'
REPLY IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO INTERVENE

NOTE ON MOTION CALENDAR
April 15, 2022

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs have attempted to carefully construct a case with no adversary. After the bipartisan Washington Redistricting Commission unanimously adopted a redistricting plan, Plaintiffs sued three elected officials from one political party to redraw a legislative district in a manner certain to elect candidates from that same party. Plaintiffs opposed a motion to join the agency which caused the alleged harm (see Dkt. # 60) and now oppose this motion by Proposed Intervenor-Defendants (“Intervenors”) to intervene (see Dkt. # 64). Plaintiffs’ efforts to be the sole presenters of evidence and legal arguments not only offends Washington’s strong bipartisan redistricting tradition, it also “offend[s] traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.”

1 Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945) (discussing personal jurisdiction, not
 2 intervention). The Court should grant Intervenor's motion to ensure full adversarial presentation 3 of the issues, absent which "a diligent judge may overlook relevant facts or legal arguments in 4 even a straightforward case." Davis v. Ayala, 576 U.S. 257, 293 (2015) (Sotomayor, J., dissenting).

5 ARGUMENT

6 I. Rule 24(a) Clearly Permits Intervention as of Right

7 Intervenor's are entitled to intervene as a matter of right in this case, because, as discussed
 8 in their Motion to Intervene (Dkt. # 57) and summarized below, their motion is timely, they have 9 a significantly protectable interest related to this case, which may be impaired by a disposition of 10 this case, and they are not adequately represented by the existing parties. *See, e.g., Oakland Bulk
 11 & Oversized Terminal, LLC v. City of Oakland*, 960 F.3d 603, 620 (9th Cir. 2020).

12 A. Intervenor's application is timely

13 Intervenor's application is timely, and none of Plaintiff's arguments otherwise are relevant.
 14 First, Plaintiff's claim intervention is untimely because they submitted a "redistricting plan to the 15 Court as a preliminary remedy," the Court "scheduled oral argument on Plaintiff's motion [for 16 preliminary injunction] for April 12," and "[t]he parties have long since conferred and filed a joint 17 26(f) report and discovery plan" (Dkt. # 64 at 10.) But Intervenor's sought consent from Plaintiff's 18 to intervene before a remedial plan was submitted, filed their motion before the preliminary 19 injunction hearing was scheduled or announced, and already indicated that they were not seeking 20 changes to the Court's current scheduling order. Thus, the Court should ignore these arguments.

21 Plaintiff's further claim that Intervenor's "would bog down the case and present no fuller a 22 presentation of relevant issues." But wouldn't the Court quickly dismiss redundant or irrelevant 23 issues, not get bogged down by them? More importantly, the potential that "additional parties and 24 arguments might make resolution of [a] case more difficult . . . is a poor reason to deny
 25 intervention," whereas the possibility intervenor's "might raise new, legitimate arguments is a
 26 reason to grant intervention, not deny it." W. Watersheds Project v. Haaland, 22 F.4th 828, 839
 27 (9th Cir. 2022) (citing Smith v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist., 830 F.3d 843, 857 (9th Cir. 2016)).

1 Lastly, Plaintiffs allege they would be “substantially prejudiced” if intervention is granted,
 2 but “the only prejudice that is relevant under this factor is that which flows from a prospective
 3 intervenor’s failure to intervene after he knew, or reasonably should have known, that his interests
 4 were not being adequately represented—and not from the fact that including another party in the 5 case might make resolution more difficult.” Smith, 830 F.3d at 857 (cleaned up). Plaintiffs’ main
 6 example—their motion for preliminary injunction—is now moot since the Court has ruled on it
 7 (see Dkt. # 66), and their other examples involve alleged prejudice from intervention at any stage,
 8 not any prejudice that would flow from Intervenor’s failure to intervene earlier.¹

9 Thus, intervention is timely because it comes at an early stage, with the motion filed one
 10 week after Intervenor became aware that their interests would not be adequately protected by the 11 existing parties, and intervention will neither delay the proceedings nor prejudice the other parties.

12 B. Intervenor have significantly protectable interests

13 Intervenor have significantly protectable interests related to the subject matter of this case,
 14 despite Plaintiffs’ claims to the contrary. First, Plaintiffs argue the Fourteenth Amendment rights
 15 of Intervenor are somehow not protectible. But the Supreme Court has emphasized that certain 16 applications of section 2 of the Voting Rights Act (“VRA”) do raise constitutional concerns. See,
 17 e.g., Abbott v. Perez, 138 S. Ct. 2305, 2314 (2018); Bartlett v. Strickland, 556 U.S. 1, 21 (2009).

18 Plaintiffs next suggest that Intervenor Campos and Ybarra lack an interest “because 19 neither individual even resides in the district being challenged here.” (Dkt. # 64 at 6.) But Plaintiffs 20 challenge the Enacted Plan “across multiple state legislative districts” (Dkt. # 1 at 39) and have 21 already sought implementation of a redistricting plan that redraws multiple neighboring districts
 22 (see Dkt. # 54 at 9). So Intervenor do have an interest in whether and how such remedial plans
 23 are drawn. See, e.g., 7C Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1908, at 24 285 (2d ed. 1986) (“[I]n cases challenging various statutory schemes . . . courts have recognized 25 the interests of those who are governed by those schemes are sufficient to support intervention.”).

26 _____
 27 ¹ Even if Plaintiffs are correct (they are not) that Intervenor should have known they would not be adequately represented by present Defendants in late February, Plaintiffs still do not allege any prejudice from this extra month.

1 Moreover, three individual Plaintiffs reside in Legislative District 14 (see Dkt. # 1 at 9), so if only
2 residents of Legislative District 15 have an interest in this case, then those Plaintiffs lack standing.
3 Lastly, Washington law gives “any registered voter” a legal right to “file a petition with the [state]
4 supreme court challenging the [redistricting] plan.” Wash. Rev. Code § 44.05.131. If voters have 5 a right to challenge a districting plan, then it is axiomatic that they have a right to defend the plan.

6 Plaintiffs also offer the strawman argument that “no individual voter or legislator is entitled 7 to any one configuration of their district.” But Intervenor (and State Representative) Ybarra never 8 claimed this, only that he has an “interest in knowing which voters will be included in his district.”
9 (Dkt. # 57 at 6.) This interest formed part of the basis for the Court’s denial of Plaintiffs’ motion
10 for preliminary injunction (see Dkt. # 66 at 9) as well as the Sixth Circuit’s recent reversal of a
11 district court’s denial of a group of Congressmen’s motion to intervene in their state’s redistricting
12 litigation, see League of Women Voters of Mich. v. Johnson, 902 F.3d 572, 579 (6th Cir. 2018)
13 (“[T]he contours of the maps affect the Congressmen directly and substantially by determining 14 which constituents the Congressmen must court for votes and represent in the legislature.”)

15 Finally, Plaintiffs suggest that Intervenor’s interest in avoiding election chaos or delay isn’t 16 protectible because it is shared by an existing defendant and is unrelated to Plaintiffs’ claims. But 17 if the test were whether intervenors had a distinct interest, then the requirement to show inadequate
18 representation would be unnecessary, because an existing party would practically never represent
19 an interest they do not have. And this interest is so related to Plaintiffs’ claims that it also formed
20 part of the Court’s basis for denying Plaintiffs’ preliminary injunction. (See Dkt. # 66 at 6.)

21 Therefore, Intervenor clearly have multiple protectible interests related to this case.

22 C. Intervenor’s interests will be impaired absent intervention

23 Next, the absence of Intervenor from this case “may impair [their] rights as a practical 24 matter.” United States v. City of Los Angeles, 288 F.3d 391, 401 (9th Cir. 2002) (cleaned up).

25 Plaintiffs make a variety of unpersuasive arguments that Intervenor’s interests somehow
26 won’t be impaired if they are not made parties to this case. For example, they claim “intervention 27 at the merits stage of these proceedings is at best premature” but also insist that intervention is

1 already untimely. (Dkt. # 64 at 8, 10-11.) They suggest Intervenors wait until after resolution of 2 this case to bring their own claims (id. at 8) despite previously arguing “[s]tate actions infringing
 3 on voting rights constitute irreparable injury” (Dkt. # 38 at 20). And they contend Intervenors’
 4 interest in ensuring that any new redistricting plan follows state and federal law would be
 5 “advanced” by the very lawsuit Intervenors seek to defeat. (Dkt. # 64 at 7-8.)

6 Clearly, Intervenors’ interests will be impaired if this litigation goes forward without them.

7 D. Intervenors’ interests will not be adequately represented

8 Lastly, Intervenors’ interests will not be adequately protected by the present parties, and 9 none of Plaintiffs’ arguments otherwise are persuasive. Plaintiffs try to shift the presumption of 10 this element by insisting that Intervenors “have the same ultimate objective as Defendants in this 11 suit.” (Dkt. # 64 at 9.) But Defendant Hobbs’ objective is to ensure the orderly conduct of elections,
 12 not to contest the merits of Plaintiffs’ claims. Intervenors, on the other hand, do not believe section
 13 2 of the VRA applies and they aim to dismiss the Plaintiffs’ claim or defeat it on the merits.

14 Plaintiffs also colorfully suggest that “many of the arguments Movants claim to offer are 15 outlandish” (id.), but all of Intervenors’ jurisdictional arguments advanced so far are grounded in 16 a careful application of caselaw and canons of statutory construction and have found support across 17 the federal judiciary.² Even if this Court is ultimately not persuaded by these arguments, they are 18 no more “outlandish” than the accomplished Article III jurists who have found them persuasive.

19 It is clear Intervenors will not be adequately represented by any of the existing parties
 20 because they wish to contest the merits of Plaintiffs’ claim, but the remaining Defendant does not.

21 II. Rule 24(b) Clearly Permits Permissive Intervention

22 The Court also has ample grounds to grant permissive intervention under Fed. R. Civ. P.
 23 24(b). As noted elsewhere, intervention is especially warranted in this case since the sole
 24 remaining Defendant “takes no position on the merits of Plaintiffs’ claims.” (Dkt. # 40 at 1-2.)

25 ² Justices Thomas and Gorsuch agreed that VRA § 2 “does not apply to redistricting.” Abbott v. Perez, 138 S. Ct. at 26 2335 (Thomas, J., concurring). Five Fifth Circuit judges agreed that 28 U.S.C. § 2284(a) applies to statutory legislative 27 redistricting cases. See Thomas v. Reeves, 961 F.3d 800, 810-27 (5th Cir. 2020) (6-5) (Willett, J., concurring). And a district court agreed VRA § 2 lacks a private right of action. See Ark. State Conf. NAACP v. Ark. Bd. of Apportionment,
 No. 4:21-cv-01239-LPR (E.D. Ark. Feb. 17, 2022), appeal docketed, No. 22-1395 (8th Cir. filed Feb. 23, 2022).

1 A. The “independent grounds for jurisdiction” requirement is inapplicable

2 Plaintiffs do not dispute Intervenors’ argument that the independent jurisdictional grounds
3 requirement for permissive intervention does not apply in this instance.

4 B. The Motion to Intervene is timely

5 For the same reasons explained above in Part I.A with respect to intervention as of right,
6 Intervenors’ motion is also sufficiently timely for permissive intervention to be granted, and 7 Plaintiffs’ arguments otherwise are just as unpersuasive.

8 C. Intervenors raise common questions of law or fact with this case

9 Plaintiffs do not dispute that Intervenors’ claims and defenses “share[] a common question
10 of law or fact” with this case. Donnelly v. Glickman, 159 F.3d 405, 412 (9th Cir. 1998).

11 D. Intervention will not cause undue delay or prejudice

12 Finally, courts “must consider whether [permissive] intervention will unduly delay or 13 prejudice the adjudication of the original parties’ rights.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(b)(3).

14 Plaintiffs argue intervention “risks undue delay and will unfairly prejudice Plaintiffs.”
15 They once again contradictorily assert that intervenors will add nothing beyond a “basic denial of 16 Plaintiffs’ Section 2 claim” yet will also “draw resources and attention” away from the Court. (Dkt.
17 # 64 at 11-12.). If Intervenors’ arguments are “basic,” they could hardly delay the proceedings.
18 Conversely (and as noted in Part I.A above), “the likelihood that additional parties and arguments 19 might make resolution of [a] case more difficult . . . is a poor reason to deny intervention,” whereas 20 the prospect that an intervenor “might raise new, legitimate arguments is a reason to grant
21 intervention, not deny it.” W. Watersheds Project, 22 F.4th at 839.

22 Between the arguments already provided and the Court’s recent ruling on the preliminary 23 injunction, there is no discernable prejudice or delay that would result in granting intervention.

24 E. Plaintiffs’ remaining insinuations should be ignored

25 Plaintiffs conclude with a series of arguments that are, at best, irrelevant. (See Dkt. # 64 at 26 12.) Intervenors’ attorney is a member of the Washington House of Representatives, but he has 27 not represented himself as such to this Court, to avoid the appearance of impropriety or prejudice

1 to the proceedings. And while Intervenor counsel share counsel with the plaintiff in Garcia v. Hobbs, No.
2 3:22-cv-5152 (W.D. Wash. filed March 15, 2022) (challenging Legislative District 15 under the 3 Fourteenth Amendment), there is no conflict to argue that a district is an unconstitutional racial
4 gerrymander under the Equal Protection Clause but is not also covered by section 2 of the VRA.

5 Most dangerously, however, Plaintiffs argue Intervenor counsel's status as a "witness"
6 in this case makes his presence as counsel inappropriate. But the complaint in Garcia v. Hobbs
7 was filed on March 15 and this Motion to Intervene was filed on March 29. The subpoena duces
8 tecum—which still has not been served at the time of this reply—is evidently dated April 1. It
9 would set a chilling precedent if a party could defeat a motion to intervene by simply serving a 10 subpoena on intervenor counsel after the motion to intervene was filed.

11 CONCLUSION

12 For the foregoing reasons, Intervenor respectfully request that this Court enter an order
13 granting their Motion to Intervene in this action as expeditiously as possible.
