INTERVENOR-PLAINTIFFS
THE OHIO ORGANIZING COLLABORATIVE ET AL.'S
RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR A TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER TO MAINTAIN THE UNCONSTITUTIONAL FEBRUARY 24 PLAN

INTRODUCTION

The Gonidakis Plaintiffs state that they “seek a temporary restraining order to maintain the status quo, an election under the Third Plan, until this Court can rule on Plaintiffs’ pending motion for a preliminary injunction.” (Gonidakis Pls’ Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 84, PageID #1156) But they are not asking this Court to maintain the status quo because the “Third Plan,” i.e., the plan that the Commission enacted on February 24, is unconstitutional and there will be no election under that plan. The relevant “status quo” is that the Commission is working to enact a new plan to comply with the Ohio Supreme Court’s rulings. The Gonidakis Plaintiffs ask this Court to disrupt that status quo.

The Secretary of State’s recent filings confirm that he has directed the eighty-eight county boards of elections in Ohio not to proceed with the February 24 Plan at this time, because the Ohio Supreme Court held that it is unconstitutional. The Gonidakis Plaintiffs seek the extraordinary remedy of a temporary restraining order from a federal court, directing a state official to resume implementing the unconstitutional February 24 Plan, days before a full preliminary injunction hearing, while the state redistricting process is ongoing. There simply is no precedent or basis for a federal court interfering in this manner. To grant this motion would throw well established principles of federalism to the wind and create a constitutional crisis in Ohio.

This motion is also unnecessary. The Gonidakis Plaintiffs have not met their burden to show that they will imminently suffer irreparable injury because the Ohio Redistricting Commission’s process is still open, and progress is being made. The Commission faces a March 28 deadline to submit a new map to the Ohio Supreme Court; and meetings are scheduled every day to accomplish this. By contrast, granting the relief the Gonidakis Plaintiffs seek of forcing an unconstitutional district plan on Ohioans would cause harm and is not in the public interest. This Court should deny the Gonidakis Plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order, and instead honor established rules of federal deference to state legislative redistricting processes and state supreme court precedent on questions of state constitutional law.

BACKGROUND

In 2015, the people of Ohio approved with more than 71 percent, across party lines, a constitutional amendment to end partisan gerrymandering and encourage bipartisanship in the redistricting process.¹ In doing so, the people directed what is now the Ohio Redistricting Commission to attempt to adopt a General Assembly district plan under which the number of districts favoring each party corresponds closely to the statewide preference of voters, and to refrain from drawing districts to primarily favor or disfavor a particular political party. Ohio Const. Article XI, Section 6. After two attempts to submit maps that failed to meet these mandatory criteria, the Gandaki's Plaintiffs claimed that legislative redistricting in the State of Ohio had reached an "impasse" warranting federal intervention. Specifically, they asked this Court to order the State to adopt a plan that the Supreme Court of Ohio had already rejected. (Am. Compl., ECF 8, PageID #447 at ¶ 4). This claimed impasse, however, was overcome.

Six days after the Gonidakis Plaintiffs filed their Complaint, the Ohio Redistricting Commission adopted new state House and Senate maps by a 4-3 vote. The OOC Petitioners and other intervenors here filed objections to the February 24 plan, arguing that it was unconstitutional under Ohio law. See League of Women Voters of Ohio v. Ohio Redistricting Comm., --N.E.--, 2022-Ohio-789, 2022 WL 803033, ¶¶ 13-22 (Mar. 16, 2022). This Court first stayed this matter while the Supreme Court of Ohio reviewed the constitutionality of the February 24 Plan enacted by the Ohio Redistricting Commission. (Minute Entry, ECF No. 68).

On March 16, the Ohio Supreme Court declared that February 24 plan was invalid and ordered the Commission to reconvene and draft a new General Assembly district plan by March 28. Any objections are due within three days after the Commission files its new plan in the Supreme Court; responses, three days after that. See League of Women Voters of Ohio, 2022-Ohio-789, 2022 WL 803033, ¶¶ 44-46. Considering that decision, Secretary of State LaRose issued Directive 2022-30 directing all eighty-eight-county board of elections to pause implementation. (SOS Response to Gonidakis Pls' Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 88-1). On March 21, 2022, the Gonidakis Plaintiffs sought a temporary restraining order "to maintain the third plan." (Gonidakis Pls' Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 84).

As of this filing, the Commission's redistricting process continues and there is no indication that it will fail meet the March 28 deadline. The Commission has scheduled public meetings every day from March 23 through March 28.² Press reports indicate that the Commission has hired independent mapmakers to assist the Commission in drafting a fourth plan.³ And two federal mediators on loan from the Sixth Circuit have been approved by the Commission to help manage the process.⁴

ARGUMENT

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Temporary restraining orders are “extraordinary remedies governed by the following considerations: (1) whether the movant has a strong likelihood of success on the merits, (2) whether the movant would suffer irreparable injury absent an injunction, (3) whether issuance of the injunction would cause substantial harm to others, and (4) whether the public interest would be served by granting the requested injunction.” Ohio Democratic Party v. LaRose, 402 F. Supp. 3d 419, 422–23 (S.D. Ohio 2019) (citing Ohio Republican Party v. Brunner, 543 F.3d 357, 361 (6th Cir. 2008)). “A temporary restraining order is meant ‘to prevent immediate and irreparable harm to the complaining party during the period necessary to conduct a hearing on a preliminary injunction.’” Hartman v. Acton, --F. Supp. 3d--, No. 2:20-CV-1952, 2020 WL 1932896, at *1 (S.D. Ohio Apr. 21, 2020) (quoting Dow Chemical Co. v. Blum, 469 F. Supp. 892, 901 (E.D. Mich. 1979)). “The party seeking preliminary relief ‘bears the burden of justifying such relief, including showing irreparable harm and likelihood of success.’” Ohio Democratic Party, 402 F. Supp. 3d at 423 (quoting McNeilly v. Land, 684 F.3d 611, 615 (6th Cir. 2012)).

II. A TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER IS UNWARRANTED

Granting the Gonidakis Plaintiffs’ motion not only is unnecessary but will harm the people of Ohio. It would also violate the U.S. Supreme Court’s mandate that federal courts defer to state redistricting processes. All indications are that the Commission is on track to meet their March 28 deadline with the Ohio Supreme Court, and there is still time for the General Assembly primary election to occur.

A. Requiring implementation of the February 24 Plan would not be “temporary” relief and does not maintain the status quo.

The Gonidakis Plaintiffs seek neither temporary relief nor to maintain the status quo. A temporary restraining order “is designed to preserve the status quo until there is an opportunity to hold a hearing on the application for a preliminary injunction”—no more, no less. WRIGHT & MILLER, 11A FED. PRAC. & PROC. CIV. § 2951 (3d ed.). The status quo here is that Ohio’s redistricting proceedings are ongoing, and the Secretary of State has directed Ohio’s 88 boards of election to pause implementation of the unconstitutional February 24 Plan. (SOS Response to Gonidakis Pls’ Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 88 at 1-2). The Gonidakis Plaintiffs seek to disrupt that status quo by interfering with (if not nullifying) the Commission’s ongoing work to enact a new plan and ordering the Secretary of State to change course—and to do so mere days before a full preliminary injunction hearing. If this Court were to grant the Gonidakis Plaintiffs’ motion today, but decide not to grant their requested preliminary injunction, the administrative and procedural whiplash would sow confusion and result in tremendous unnecessary cost. For this reason alone, the instant motion should be denied.

B. There is no immediate injury that would require this Court to order the implementation of the unconstitutional February 24 Plan.

Implementing the unconstitutional February 24 Plan is not required to mitigate any harm. The Ohio Supreme Court, whose decisions are entitled to this Court’s full faith and credit, has ordered the Commission to enact a new plan consistent with its opinions. See League of Women Voters of Ohio, 2022-Ohio-789, ¶¶ 44-46. The Commission appears to be taking its duty seriously. Not only has it scheduled numerous meetings, but recent reports state that it has added two new mapmakers and two federal court mediators to help ensure it can meet its March 28 deadline.⁵ As this Court recognized (Order, ECF No. 55), the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision in Grove v. Emison requires federal judges “to defer consideration of disputes involving redistricting where the State, through its legislative or judicial branch, has begun to address that highly political task itself.” 507 U.S. 25, 33 (1993). This principle still controls. When the state’s legislative and judicial branches are both actively engaged in the redistricting process, as a matter of law, Ohio’s redistricting process has not concluded, and this Court may not interfere. See Grove, 507 U.S. at 34-36.

Deference to Ohio’s ongoing redistricting proceedings is particularly warranted as there is no harm here that a temporary restraining order must address. Again, as the Secretary of State has recognized, he cannot conduct a primary election with a General Assembly district plan that the Ohio Supreme Court has declared to be unconstitutional. (SOS Response to Gonidakis Pls’ Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 88 at 1) (acknowledging the Ohio Supreme Court “invalidated” the Commission’s unconstitutional February 24 Plan, leaving him no choice but to “pause” implementation of that plan). The consequence will simply be that “he will have to instruct the boards of election to proceed with the 2022 primary election without the state legislative races being part of that election.” (Id. at 3). But this does not mean that the Gonidakis Plaintiffs (or any Ohioans) will be denied the right to vote or assemble. Ohio Redistricting Commission is currently preparing a new plan due to be filed on March 28, 2022. The General Assembly has the power to modify the date for the primary election and associated deadlines and to delegate authority to the Secretary to adjust them (see 134th General Assembly, H.B. 93, Section 4). And it is within the ⁵ Susan Tebben, Legal mediators added to the Ohio redistricting fold, NEWS5CLEVELAND (Mar. 23, 2022), <https://www.news5cleveland.com/news/state/legal-mediators-added-to-the-ohio-redistricting-fold>.

Ohio Supreme Court's equitable authority to do so as well. There is still plenty of time for the dates to be moved, and a new primary date set in time meet all necessary deadlines.

“The absence of a showing of irreparable harm is, in itself, sufficient grounds upon which to deny a preliminary injunction.” Harris v. United States, 745 F.2d 535, 536 (8th Cir. 1984). See also Enable Healthcare, Inc. v. Cleveland Quality Healthnet, LLC, No. 1:16 CV 2395, 2016 WL 6581813, at *4 (N.D. Ohio Nov. 7, 2016) (addressing only “the irreparable harm factor because plaintiff has failed to show that it will suffer any irreparable injury if the Court denies its motion”); Northeast Ohio Coalition for Homeless v. Blackwell, 467 F.3d 999, 1009 (6th Cir. 2006) (the court considers the same factors considered in determining whether to issue a TRO or preliminary injunction). For this reason, too, the Court should defer to the state redistricting process and deny the Gonidakis Plaintiffs’ extraordinary request.

C. Implementation of the unconstitutional February 24 Plan will cause substantial harm to others.

Conversely, if this Court were to grant the Gonidakis Plaintiffs’ motion for a temporary restraining order and order the Secretary to proceed with the unconstitutional February 24 Plan, it will cause substantial harm to others. Recall that the relevant amendment to the Ohio Constitution was endorsed by over 70 percent of the Ohio electorate. That amendment both establishes the methodology for determining whether a given district plan is constitutional and vests the Ohio Supreme Court with jurisdiction to review that constitutionality. Forcing implementation of the February 24 Plan through the federal court system, when that very district plan has already been determined unconstitutional and when the redistricting process is still ongoing, would cause substantial harm to the people of Ohio.

Moreover, rushing to implement temporary injunctive relief runs a serious risk of an insecure and disorderly election, particularly with the real possibility of an electoral whipsaw as the Commission continues with its map drawing. The Secretary of State has already indicated that “[b]y no later than the close of business [today], Wednesday, March 23, the Secretary must issue instructions to the county boards of election on whether to retain or remove the General Assembly races from their primary election ballots[.]” (SOS Response to Gonidakis Pls’ Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 88, PageID #1312). This motion is scheduled to be heard two days later, on March 25, 2022. It simply is not possible for the Secretary of State to change course now.

D. The Gonidakis Plaintiffs cannot succeed on the merits of their claims.

The Gonidakis Plaintiffs cannot succeed on the merits because it is impossible to grant their request to implement the unconstitutional February 24 Plan without violating longstanding principles of comity. A federal court cannot order state officials to conduct elections under a General Assembly plan that the Ohio Supreme Court has already held violates a valid provision of the Ohio Constitution.⁶ And the Gonidakis Plaintiffs do not assert that federal law preempts the Ohio constitutional provisions underlying the Ohio Supreme Court’s decisions. The Ohio Supreme Court’s conclusion that the February 24 Plan violates the Ohio Constitution is therefore controlling and precludes an order requiring its use. Ohio’s Attorney General has acknowledged as much. See Bennett Petitioners’ Opposition to Emergency Motion to Lift Stay, ECF 78, PageID #1115; citing Feb. 22, 2022, Letter from Attorney General Yost to Governor DeWine et al., at 2 (“The federal court may not order the use of a map that was rejected by the Ohio

Supreme Court, where the underlying provision of the state constitution has not been found to violate the federal constitution.”) (Ex. A).

The Gonidakis Plaintiffs try to side-step this argument by contending this Court should mandate use of the unconstitutional February 24 Plan because the Ohio Supreme Court’s “evolving standards violate the U.S. Constitution.”⁷ (Gonidakis Pls’ Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 84, PageID #1164). This novel position is not supported by the Gonidakis Plaintiffs’ cited case law. In Reich v. Collins, the petitioner, a taxpayer, had paid a tax in reliance on the existence of a post-deprivation remedy. 513 U.S. 106 (1994). “Specifically, in the mid-1980’s, Georgia held out what plainly appeared to be a ‘clear and certain’ postdeprivation remedy, in the form of its tax refund statute, and then declared, only after Reich and others had paid the disputed taxes, that no such remedy exists.” Id. at 111. In Bowie v. District of Columbia, petitioners were convicted of criminal trespass based on an unprecedented interpretation of the statute to include “remaining on the premises of another after receiving notice to leave.” 378 U.S. 347, 350, 354-55 (1964). Unlike the petitioners in Reich and Bowie, the Gonidakis Plaintiffs allege no reliance on a state-law remedy that was subsequently eliminated. In Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U.S. 317 (1917), petitioner sought to offer evidence at trial that his land was not subject to the challenged tax. The Gonidakis Plaintiffs here made no attempt to offer evidence in the Ohio Redistricting Commission, because no such opportunity is provided by the Ohio Constitution.

Their attempt to justify the extraordinary relief they seek by pointing to Reynolds v. Sims is similarly feeble. 377 U.S. 533 (1964). Reynolds v. Sims was a one-person-one-vote case; the Court held that state seats in the Alabama legislature apportioned by county, rather than by population, and which had not been reapportioned in over 60 years, violated the Equal Protection Clause. Id. at 586-71. But procedural posture matters. The U.S. Supreme Court did not effectively overrule the Alabama Supreme Court and force implementation of a plan that the Alabama Supreme Court had held unconstitutional, as the Gonidakis Plaintiffs seek here. Rather, the Alabama Supreme Court's refusal to step in, and its allowance of a plan that violated the U.S. Constitution, prompted federal court action. Indeed, Reynolds v. Sims is fully consistent with Grove: the district court initially declined to stay the primary so that the legislature would have a chance to remedy the discrepancies. Id. at 586. Here, resolving the district plan through the ongoing state redistricting process will avoid any risk of malapportionment under the U.S. Constitution. Not only does Reynolds v. Sims fail to support the relief that the Gonidakis Plaintiffs seek, but it actually stands in favor of denying the instant motion so that district plan can be adopted through the ongoing state redistricting process.

E. It is in the public interest to deny the Gonidakis Plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order.

Consistent with the U.S. Supreme Court's proclamation in Grove, the public interest favors permitting the ongoing state process to continue. Although the Gonidakis Plaintiffs are correct that "the public has interest in voting" (Gonidakis Pls' Mot. for a TRO, ECF No. 84, PageID #1169), that statement is incomplete: the public has an interest in voting in accordance with the amendment to the Ohio Constitution that over 70 percent of them voted for. Every indication is that Ohioans' votes are not in jeopardy: the Commission is actively working toward a new district plan, and the Ohio Supreme Court is actively engaged in the process. The public interest favors letting that process come to completion so that the people of Ohio can vote under a constitutional district plan.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the OOC Petitioners respectfully request that this Court deny the Gonidakis Plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order.

The Ohio General Assembly
Columbus, Ohio 43215

Dear Colleagues:

What happens now? This letter is to outline some answers to that question, and to identify possible actions—and the probable outcome of inaction.

I am writing to you on behalf of my client, the State of Ohio. However, this is not a legal brief, and my aim is to lay out the law in plain English to assist you in your duties. You do not answer to me, but to the people of Ohio...as do I. We have parallel duties to the same superior.

Maps for the General Assembly have been rejected twice by the Ohio Supreme Court. The Court's deadline to produce a third came and went without a new map and last Friday the Court issued a short entry requiring the Redistricting Commission to show cause by this Wednesday as to why it failed to comply with the Court's earlier order to produce a new state legislative map proposal.

The Congressional map is not as far along, but the first federal map was rejected by the Ohio Supreme Court and time ran out on a second without action by the General Assembly. Though that matter is pending before the Redistricting Commission, no action has yet been taken.

The result: there are no maps as of today for state or federal legislative districts, or the offices that are dependent on them, such as the State Board of Education or the state central committees of the political parties. This presents an unusual legal problem, because lawfully enacted, Constitutional maps are what lawyers call a condition precedent to the ballot. That is, legislative district maps have to happen before the ballot.

That bit of legal logic takes on special importance today, because today is the statutory deadline for the Secretary of State to certify the ballot for the 2022 Primary Election. Without valid maps, he cannot certify candidates to county board of elections, because there is no way to tell which precincts are in which districts—or, for that matter, which candidates are in which districts, because there are no districts.

30 E. Broad Street, 17th Floor, | Columbus, OH | 43215

www.OhioAttorneyGeneral.gov

Yet Ohio law requires a primary election to be held on May 3, and the General Assembly has reserved the power to move that date to itself—a decision properly within the Legislature's authority. Neither court nor executive may change that.

So, a primary election will be held, and the Secretary of State will certify a ballot today without legislative candidates, because no certification is possible without maps. For each and every one of you, your voters will go to the polls on May 3—and they will not see your name. Indeed, none of you even know who your voters are. The Secretary of State will have fulfilled his statutory duties, but few would view this outcome as sufficient.

The General Assembly granted the power to the Secretary of State to move certain statutory deadlines leading up to the primary election for races impacted by redistricting, and the ballot certification deadline is one of them. Statewide and county office races are not impacted by redistricting, the Secretary has no authority to move deadlines related to them and he will be certifying that ballot today. As for statehouse and congressional races, the Secretary of State informs me that necessary actions between these deadlines form a “critical pathway” of tasks that take a certain amount of time, and must be done in order. He does not feel he can move this deadline and still complete the necessary work prior to May 3, 2022. I have no reason to doubt him.

It has been suggested that the Secretary could use the existing 2011 maps until new maps are qualified. However, because of the decennial census, the 2011 maps are now “malapportioned”—some districts have too many voters and others have too few. This violates existing case law applying the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

It is true that the 2011 maps, perhaps, could be adjusted by a federal court, and there is a brand-new lawsuit seeking to invoke federal court jurisdiction. But that lawsuit seeks to use the map passed on January 22 and invalidated by the Ohio Supreme Court on state constitutional grounds, not the 2011 map. The federal court may not order the use of a map that was rejected by the Ohio Supreme Court, where the underlying provision of the state constitution has not been found to violate the federal constitution. In any event, any action by the federal court is unlikely to come early enough to cure the May 3 ballot.

The uncertainty does not end in May. Without a primary election decision on party nominations, it is unclear what the general election in November would look like. Assuming valid maps exist by then, do all candidates run in a field? A thousand other questions arise, and there is no clear view from this place in time of how it would sort out.

Unless you act.

The General Assembly has the authority to fix this. An obvious solution is to move the primary date, though that would take a two-thirds vote of both chambers and the Governor's signature because it would require an emergency clause. If a primary election ballot largely without one of the three branches of government does not constitute an emergency, what does? (Obviously, the maps do not impact primary races for the United State Senate.)

I personally have immense distaste for moving the date of the primary. Government should favor regular order, and predictability is one indicia of trustworthiness. Yet here we are, with an intractable situation not of your design that demands a solution.

Other, less-obvious solutions are possible. A second, separate primary process could be put in place for districted legislative offices only. Some sort of ranked-choice voting could be enacted, or a post-November runoff process. In federal law, the in extremis statutory provision is that all congressional candidates run at-large, state-wide.

Our constitution invests you—my distinguished colleagues in both parties—with the authority to act, and your good minds may find other solutions. But a solution must be found.

The federal deadline for mailing primary ballots to overseas and military voters is fast approaching. Obviously, the General Assembly is without authority to move it. I would urge you to consider it in your deliberations, and consider how it might be collaterally impacted by the current situation.

This is not fundamentally about the map-drawing process. Maps will eventually emerge as the legal reviews continue, and it is to be hoped, those charged with the responsibility continue to negotiate and deliberate toward a resolution.

This is about running a primary election that includes the nominating process for the legislative branch, which is most directly reflective of the will of the people. It is up to you to give them their voice.

Yours,

Dave Yost
