IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT WESTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS FAYETTEVILLE DIVISION

ARKANSAS UNITED, et al.,

PLAINTIFFS,

v. No. 5:20CV05193 TLB

JOHN THURSTON, in his official capacity as the Secretary of State of Arkansas, et al.,

DEFENDANTS.

OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR INDICATIVE RULING

In the three-and-a-half years since Plaintiffs brought this case, Plaintiffs never attempted to raise any claim under Section 1983. Instead, Plaintiffs opted to pursue claims directly under the Voting Rights Act and indeed used the fact that they had not pursued claims under Section 1983 to defeat arguments by the Benton and Sebastian County Defendants. And Plaintiffs' strategy seemed to work. The Court granted them summary judgment, including rejecting Defendants' continuous argument that Section 208 of the Voting Rights Act doesn't provide a private right of action. But they now realize that was a mistake and ask this Court for a post-final judgment do-over. This Court should deny their motion and reject their effort to plead a claim they tactically decided not to pursue.

I. Plaintiffs deliberately declined to sue under Section 1983.

Plaintiffs' complaint didn't assert a cause of action under section 1983. See Doc. 2. That was a deliberate, tactical choice, and they shouldn't be given a do-over just because they now realize that was a mistake.

Defendants moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' original complaint on the grounds that Section 208 doesn't provide a private right of action. See Doc. 63 at 10 ("Section 208...does not provide private parties with a cause of action."). Yet Plaintiffs decided not to alter course and attempt to sue under Section 1983 when they subsequently amended their complaint. Defendants renewed that argument in response to Plaintiffs' amended complaint. See Doc. 87 at 10 ("Section 208...does not provide private parties with a cause of action."). And even when the parties "agree[d]" thereafter that Plaintiffs could have up to "90 days" following the February 29, 2021, case-management hearing to further "amend[] [their] pleadings," Plaintiffs didn't attempt to add a Section 1983 cause of action. Doc. 101 at 6 (Joint Rule 26(f) Report); see Doc. 103 (February 29, 2021, case-management hearing text-only minute entry). Instead, they plowed forward—seeking summary judgment on their VRA claim.

Then, almost a year later and while the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment were pending, on February 17, 2022, another district court here in Arkansas held that there is no private right of action to enforce comparable language in Section 2. See Ark. State Conf. NAACP v. Ark. Bd. of Apportionment, 586 F. Supp. 3d 893, 911 (E.D. Ark. 2022). Plaintiffs did nothing in response, and six months later, the Court granted their motion for summary judgment. See Docs. 168, 169 (August 19, 2022 opinion and judgment).

Defendants appealed, and their opening brief argued, once again, that there is no private right of action to enforce Section 208. See Arkansas United v. Thurston, No. 22-2918, Entry ID No. 5229102, at 35-39 (8th Cir.). And Plaintiffs—more than a year ago—agreed that "[t]his appeal raises the question of whether Section 208 of the Voting Rights Act is privately enforceable" and that this "is similar to the question squarely presented in" the then pending appeal in "Arkansas State Conference NAACP." Id., Entry ID No. 5239587, at 1. Thus, this Eighth Circuit agreed to hold the appeal in abeyance pending the outcome of that case. But critically Plaintiffs made no claim that they should be allowed to return to this Court to amend their complaint—regardless of the outcome of that case.

The Eighth Circuit then decided Arkansas State Conference of the NAACP v. Arkansas Board of Apportionment, 86 F.4th 1204 (8th Cir. 2023), and concluded there is no private right of action to enforce Section 2. It lifted the abeyance in the appeal of this case and ordered the parties to continue briefing. Plaintiffs didn't object to that course of action until just days before Defendants were scheduled to file their appellants' brief, when they suddenly changed positions and filed a motion asking this Court for "an indicative ruling" about whether it would allow them a do-over. Doc. 211 at 4.

This Court should reject that request because Plaintiffs had multiple, repeated opportunities to plead a Section 1983 cause of action, and Defendants have consistently argued that Section 208 doesn't provide a private right of action. Consequently, Plaintiffs cannot claim that they were somehow surprised or are unfairly prejudiced by their own decisions.

Indeed, recognizing the weakness of the claim that the entirety of the VRA is privately enforceable, other "plaintiffs have invoked § 1983 from the start, beginning with their complaints." Ark. State Conf. NAACP v. Ark. Bd. of Apportionment, 91 F.4th 967, 968 (8th Cir. 2024) (Stras, J., concurring in denial of rehearing en banc). Plaintiffs don't get a do-over just because they made a poor tactical decision. See id. (rejecting a similar claim by State Conference plaintiffs that they should be allowed to add a Section 1983 claim, "whether to . . . stand on the complaint' is 'an ordinary tactical decision,' and plaintiffs are not entitled to a do-over if it turns out badly." Id. (quoting Anderson Merchandisers, LLC, 799 F.3d 957, 963, 964 n.3 (8th Cir. 2015)). Plaintiffs' motion should be denied.

II. Plaintiffs haven't argued that an amendment is proper, to say nothing of extraordinary post-appeal relief via an indicative ruling.

Plaintiffs' motion for an indicative ruling asks the Court to rule on whether it would grant a hypothetical, untimely motion to file a second amended complaint that they haven't proffered. So Plaintiffs haven't actually filed any "motion . . . for relief that the court lacks authority to grant." Fed. R. Civ. P. 62.1(a). That too is grounds for denying their motion.

Moreover, even if Plaintiffs had filed such a motion, "[l]eave to amend" could only "be granted if it is consistent with the stringent standards governing the grant of Rule 59(e) and Rule 60(b) relief." United States v. Mask of Ka-Nefer-Nefer, 752 F.3d 737, 743 (8th Cir. 2014). And Plaintiffs haven't filed either of those motions, likely because they'd be untimely and because they're not designed to relieve a party of the consequences of its tactical decisions years later. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 62.1(a) (a motion for relief must be "timely").

A Rule 59(e) motion to alter or amend the judgment "must be filed no later than 28 days after the entry of the judgment," Fed. R. Giv. P. 59(e), and a Rule 60(b) motion must be filed "within a reasonable time," in many cases "no more than a year after the entry of the judgment." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(c)(1). "When considering good cause for an amended complaint, the diligence of the party seeking the amendment is an important consideration," Kozlov v. Associated Wholesale Grocers, Inc., 818 F.3d 380, 395 (8th Cir. 2016), and Plaintiffs have been anything but diligent here.

Because Plaintiffs haven't filed any appropriate motion, they haven't asserted any basis for seeking relief from the final judgment that they urged the Court to enter in the first place.

"[A] judgment generally will be set aside only to accommodate some new matter that could not have been asserted during the [district court litigation], which means that relief will not be available in many instances in which leave to amend would be granted in the prejudgment situation." 6 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure, sec. 1489 (3d ed.). Indeed, "after judgment has been entered" the party seeking to "amend its complaint had better provide the district court with a good reason to grant its motion." Harris v. City of Auburn, 27 F.3d 1284, 1287 (7th Cir. 1994).

The fact that Plaintiffs' legal theory is untenable wouldn't be sufficient and certainly wouldn't constitute a "substantial issue" under Rule 62.1. Denying leave to amend the amended complaint to change the theory of Plaintiffs' case after judgment has been entered against them wouldn't be an abuse of discretion, see Hawks v. J.P. Morgan Chase Bank, 591 F.3d 1043, 1050 (8th Cir. 2010), and there's all the more reason to deny it when (as here) that judgment favored them. See Freeman v. Cont'l Gin Co., 381 F.2d 459, 469-70 (5th Cir. 1967) ("A busy district court need not allow itself to be imposed upon by the presentation of theories seriatim."). The interests of judicial economy and preserving the parties' resources, as well as the "strong interest in preserving the finality of judgments," Henderson v. Kibbe, 431 U.S. 145, 154 n.13 (1977), also counsel against granting Plaintiffs such extraordinary relief. Indeed, that's why Plaintiffs have not cited a single case doing what they're asking the Court to do here. That's not what the indicative ruling process is designed to do. See, e.g., Louisiana v. Becerra, No. 21-30734, 2022 WL 445159, at *3 (5th Cir. Feb. 14, 2022) (denying prevailing parties' motion for a remand to obtain an indicative ruling on leave to amend to add a new "claim [that] could have been brought at the very beginning of this case").

Again, Plaintiffs deliberately passed up multiple opportunities to sue under Section 1983. "[I]t would [be] backwards to treat the plaintiffs' choice not to add a § 1983 claim as the reason to decide they could." Ark. State Conf. NAACP, 91 F.4th at 968.

III. Basic principles of equity preclude Plaintiffs from adding Section 1983.

Plaintiffs' motion should also be denied because their decision not to bring a Section 1983 suit below accrued to their benefit and Defendants would be prejudiced by allowing Plaintiffs to suddenly change tactics.

First, Plaintiffs deliberately used their choice not to sue under Section 1983 as a sword to defeat the Benton and Sebastian County Defendants' municipal-liability defense at the motion-to-dismiss stage, arguing that "Plaintiffs here do not sue pursuant to Section 1983." Doc. 96 at 4; id. ("Defendants mistakenly assert [] that this action is brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983."); Doc. 95 at 3-4 ("Plaintiffs are not Section 1983 plaintiffs with respect to their Voting Rights Act claim.").

This Court accepted Plaintiffs' argument and rejected the counties' defense on the basis that the municipal-liability framework is "specific to suits brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and the 'policy or custom' requirement does not apply to Plaintiffs' claims under the VRA."

Doc. 102, Order Denying Motion to Dismiss, at 6. Plaintiffs thus benefited from their deliberate choice not to bring this action under Section 1983.

Second, basic principles of equity preclude Plaintiffs from now asserting a litigation position inconsistent with their prior tactical decisions. See, e.g., June Med. Servs. L.L.C. v. Russo, 140 S. Ct. 2103, 2118 (2020) (waiver); United States v. Nunez-Hernandez, 43 F.4th 857, 859 (8th Cir. 2022) (forfeiture); United States ex rel. Gebert v. Transp. Admin. Servs., 260 F.3d 909, 917 (8th Cir. 2001) (estoppel). Defendants would be prejudiced by Plaintiffs' assertion of Section 1983 claims years after summary judgment because Defendants decided to appeal the Court's judgment (and thus, to incur potential liability for attorney's fees) in the absence of such claims.

Plaintiffs can't have their cake and eat it too. But this isn't the first time they've tried to do just that. Plaintiffs also asserted Section 1988 as a basis for attorney's fees, knowing full well that they hadn't brought an "action or proceeding to enforce a provision of section[] . . . 1983."

R. Doc. 174 at 5 (quoting 42 U.S.C. 1988); see id. at 12 (relying on Section 1988 for costs).

Plaintiffs' motion should be denied.

IV. The remand Plaintiffs seek isn't limited.

Plaintiffs claim they ultimately seek "a limited remand for the purpose of considering Plaintiffs' motion to amend their complaint." Doc. 211 at 5. But this Court should not be misled. Plaintiffs are seeking nothing less than to revamp their entire case. Indeed, on even the most optimistic scenario, if Plaintiffs got what they wanted, this case would essentially begin from scratch with a new complaint, motion to dismiss, and subsequent filings. So the remand ultimately wouldn't be limited: it'd be a complete 10-over. That's not in the interest of judicial economy, and it's unfair to Defendants who spent years arguing what Plaintiffs themselves have only now come to realize.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs seek to abuse the indicative-ruling procedure to get more than a second bite at the apple. Their motion is untimely and unsupported, and the Court should deny it.
