

No. 23-719

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

DONALD J. TRUMP,

Petitioner,

v.

NORMA ANDERSON ET AL.,

Respondents.

On Writ of Certiorari to the Colorado Supreme Court

BRIEF FOR SENATOR STEVE DAINES &
NATIONAL REPUBLICAN SENATORIAL COMMITTEE AS AMICI CURIAE
IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

NOEL J. FRANCISCO

JOHN M. GORE

Counsel of Record

E. STEWART CROSLAND

HASHIM M. MOOPAN

JONES DAY

51 Louisiana Avenue, NW

Washington, DC 20001

(202) 879-3939

jmgore@jonesday.com

Counsel for Amici Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE	1
INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	5
I. THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT ERRED BY MODIFYING THE QUALIFICATIONS FOR THE OFFICE OF PRESIDENT.....	5
A. The Constitution Prohibits States From Altering The Qualifications For The Office Of President.....	5
B. Section 3 Imposes A Qualification On Holding Office, Not Running For Office	7
C. The Colorado Supreme Court Improperly Altered Section 3 And The Qualifications For The Office Of President.....	12
D. The Colorado Supreme Court Misconstrued The Constitution And This Court’s Precedents	16
II. THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT VIOLATED THE FIRST AMENDMENT.....	20
CONCLUSION	26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
CASES
Anderson v. Celebrezze , 460 U.S. 780 (1983).....	24
Anderson v. Griswold , No. 23SA300, 2023 WL 8770111 (Colo. Dec. 19, 2023).....	12, 14–18, 22, 23, 25
Burdick v. Takushi , 504 U.S. 428 (1992).....	24
Cal. Democratic Party v. Jones , 530 U.S. 567 (2000).....	21, 22, 23, 25
Democratic Party of U.S. v. Wis. ex rel La Follette , 450 U.S. 107 (1981).....	22, 23
Eu v. S.F. Cnty. Democratic Cent. Comm. , 489 U.S. 214 (1989).....	20, 22
Grove v. Simon , No. A23-1354, 2023 WL 7392541 (Minn. Nov. 8, 2023)	23
Hassan v. Colorado , 495 F. App’x 947 (10th Cir. 2012).....	19, 24
Lindsay v. Bowen , 750 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2014).....	19
M’Culloch v. Maryland , 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819).....	9
Powell v. McCormack , 395 U.S. 486 (1969).....	7, 16

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

	Page(s)
Schaefer v. Townsend , 215 F.3d 1031 (9th Cir. 2000).....	3, 9, 13
Socialist Workers Party of Ill. v. Ogilvie , 357 F. Supp. 109 (N.D. Ill. 1972).....	19
Tashjian v. Republican Party of Conn. , 479 U.S. 208 (1986).....	22, 24
Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser , 459 F.3d 582 (5th Cir. 2006).....	3, 9, 13
Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party , 520 U.S. 351 (1997).....	25
U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton , 514 U.S. 779 (1995).....	3, 5–7, 13, 14, 16–18, 20
Wesberry v. Sanders , 376 U.S. 1 (1964).....	5
CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY AUTHORITIES
U.S. Const. amend. I	4, 20–24
U.S. Const. amend. XII	6
U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3	2, 3, 4, 7–20, 24, 25
U.S. Const. amend. XX.....	3, 9, 11, 12, 15, 18
U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 2	8, 13
U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl.3	8, 13
U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl.2	8
U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl.1.....	8

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

	Page(s)
U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5.....	9, 11, 13, 19, 24
3 U.S.C. § 15	15
52 U.S.C. § 30101	1
Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432 (1898).....	12
Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142 (1872).....	12
 OTHER AUTHORITIES
Cong. Globe, 40 Cong., 3 Sess., 13-14 (Dec. 7, 1868).....	10
Cong. Globe, 40 Cong., 3 Sess., 120-121 (Dec. 17, 1868).....	10
Cong. Globe, 40 Cong., 2 Sess., 4499 (July 25, 1868).....	10
G. McCrary, American Law of Elections (4th ed. 1897).....	13
1 Story § 627	5, 6
The White House, President Joe Biden.....	9

INTEREST OF THE *AMICI CURIAE*¹

Amicus curiae Senator Steve Daines is a member of the Republican Party and represents the people of Montana in the United States Senate. Senator Daines currently serves as the Chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee (NRSC). Amicus curiae NRSC is a registered “national committee” of the Republican Party, as defined by 52 U.S.C. § 30101(14), and the Republican Party’s senatorial campaign committee. Its membership includes all incumbent Republican Members of the United States Senate.

Chairman Daines and NRSC support and seek to uphold the Constitution’s guarantee of free and fair elections for all Americans. Chairman Daines and NRSC also support and seek to uphold the rights of all American citizens to vote for, and of political parties to nominate, the candidate of their choice in federal elections. Amici therefore have a unique and profound interest in this case, in which the Colorado Supreme Court misapplied the Constitution to impermissibly exclude a candidate for federal office from the ballot in the Republican Party’s upcoming primary election.

¹ No counsel for a party authored any portion of this brief, and no person other than amici curiae and their counsel made any monetary contribution intended to fund its preparation or submission.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The right of all citizens to participate in free and fair elections and to vote for the candidate of their choice is the Constitution's bedrock guarantee of American democracy. The Colorado Supreme Court's decision barring President Trump from the Republican Party's primary election ballot breaches that guarantee and threatens to thwart the democratic process and the will of the American people in 2024 and beyond. For that reason, amici support President Trump's request for this Court to reverse the unconstitutional decision below.

Although amici agree that the Colorado Supreme Court made multiple constitutional errors concerning section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment, they write to emphasize the importance of the error on the scope of any section 3 disqualification: namely, whether or not section 3 applies, unquestionably does not allow Colorado to exclude President Trump from the ballot, for two separate but reinforcing reasons.

First, the Colorado Supreme Court impermissibly altered the qualifications for the office of President and interfered with Congress's sole prerogative to remove any section 3 disqualification. By its plain text, section 3 identifies a disqualification from serving in certain offices, but does not disqualify a covered person from running for office. And that textual distinction is particularly important because, unlike certain other disqualifications, section 3 makes that disqualification removable—and it commits the decision of whether and when to remove it exclusively to Congress. So whether or not the Colorado Supreme Court were correct that President Trump cannot take office on Inauguration Day, that court had no basis to hold that he cannot run for office on Election Day and also seek removal of any alleged disqualification from Congress if necessary. Indeed, the Twentieth Amendment preserves the right of Presidential candidates to run, and the right of Congress to act, by prescribing an interstitial rule for situations where the President-elect has failed to attain the qualifications for office but can still do so during his Term—the Vice President serves as Acting President unless and until the disqualification is lifted.

The Colorado Supreme Court thus altered the qualifications for the office of President. It created a new rule that any section 3 disqualification must be removed by Congress before voters even have the opportunity to select their chosen candidate—thereby accelerating when Congress must act and excluding candidates whose disqualification could have been removed later. But in U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779 (1995), all nine Justices agreed that States lack the power under the Constitution to use ballot-access restrictions to alter the qualifications for the office of President. See id. at 803-04 (maj. op.); id. at 855 n.6, 861-62 (Thomas, J., dissenting). Notably, courts of appeals have likewise held that a State cannot deny ballot access to candidates for Congress who do not reside within the State, because the Constitution requires such residency only on Election Day, not before. See Tex. Democratic Party v. Benkiser, 459 F.3d 582, 589-90 (5th Cir. 2006); Schaefer v. Townsend, 215 F.3d 1031, 1037 (9th Cir. 2000). And the error in this context is particularly egregious because it effectively usurped Congress's sole authority to decide when, if at all, to remove any section 3 disqualification.

Second, the Colorado Supreme Court ran roughshod over the First Amendment rights of voters and political parties without offering a lawful justification. Indeed, its decision wholly bans voters and a political party from supporting, voting for, and potentially nominating their choice of Presidential candidate in the party's primary election— notwithstanding that it is entirely possible that, by Inauguration Day, President Trump will be qualified to take office even on the Colorado Supreme Court's view of section 3. Of course, voters are free to cast their ballots for an opposing candidate if they do not wish to take the chance that President Trump will be disqualified, but neither the First Amendment nor basic principles of democracy allow the Colorado Supreme Court to make that decision for them.

The Colorado Supreme Court's decision will unleash electoral chaos in the fast-approaching 2024 elections. It is virtually certain to lead to an untenable patchwork of state-court rulings on whether President Trump appears on the ballot, disenfranchising millions of voters in states that follow its lead. Even worse, it threatens to decide the outcome of the 2024 election by stripping the American people of the right to elect the President and transferring that right to state courts.

The Constitution, the American people, and our American democracy deserve better. The Court should reverse the decision below and uphold the right of the American people to nominate and vote for the Presidential candidate of their choice.

ARGUMENT

I. THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT ERRED BY MODIFYING THE QUALIFICATIONS FOR THE OFFICE OF PRESIDENT

A. The Constitution Prohibits States From Altering The Qualifications For The Office Of President

States—including state courts—lack authority to “alter or add to” the Constitution’s qualifications for federal offices, including especially the office of President. U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 796. In U.S. Term Limits, this Court held on a 5-4 vote that States lack authority to alter the qualifications for those representing them in Congress. See id. at 783. The Court, moreover, unanimously agreed that States may not alter the qualifications for the office of President.

For its part, the majority in U.S. Term Limits pointed out that the Framers “create[d] an entirely new National Government with a National Executive, National Judiciary, and a National Legislature,” thereby “creating a direct link between the National Government and the people of the United States.” Id. at 803 (quoting Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 10 (1964)) (emphasis added). Thus, quoting Justice Story, the majority reasoned that States “have just as much right, and no more, to prescribe new qualifications for a representative, as they have for a president”—which is to say, none. Id. (quoting 1 Story § 627) (emphasis added); see also id. at 803-04 (“It is no original prerogative of state power to appoint a representative, a senator, or president for the union.”) (quoting 1 Story § 627).

Notably, the dissent agreed. Although it concluded that “the people of a single State” have authority to “prescribe qualifications for their own representatives in Congress,” it repeatedly acknowledged that “the people of a single State may not prescribe qualifications for the President of the United States.” Id. at 855 n.6 (Thomas, J., dissenting); see also id. at 861-62 (noting that States have no reserved power “to set qualifications for the office of President”).

This conclusion is manifest in our system of government. “[T]he states can exercise no powers whatsoever, which exclusively spring out of the existence of the national government, which the constitution does not delegate to them.” Id. at 802 (maj op.) (quoting 1 Story § 627). And at the very least, “the selection of the President, like the operation of the Bank of the United States, is not up to the people of any single State.” Id. at 855 n.6 (Thomas, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Were the law otherwise, individual States could adopt different qualifications for the office of a President who represents the Nation as a whole—including qualifications that conflict with the qualifications adopted in other States. Thus, for instance, each State could adopt a qualification requiring the President to be a resident of that State. In that scenario, no President could ever be elected because no candidate could receive a majority of votes in the Electoral College. See U.S. Const. amend. XII.

Even short of that, any State-altered qualification erases nationwide uniformity in the qualifications for the office of President and opens the door to States imposing their political preferences on the country as a whole (such as by enacting a “qualification” that a President have previously served in the federal government). Allowing States to alter or add to the qualifications for the office of President would be “contrary to the ‘fundamental principle of our representative democracy,’ embodied in the Constitution, that ‘the people should choose whom they please to govern them.’” U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 783 (quoting Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 547 (1969)).

B. Section 3 Imposes A Qualification On Holding Office, Not Running For Office

Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment states:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each house, remove such disability.

U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3 (emphasis added).

Section 3’s disqualification thus attaches in two circumstances: “be[ing]” a member of Congress or Presidential elector or “hold[ing]” an enumerated office under the United States or any State. Id. Both verbs to “be” and to “hold” refer to the state of affairs when *serv*ing in office, not when *seek*ing office. See id. This construction is borne out by other Constitutional provisions, which use “hold” to refer exclusively to serving in office. See, e.g., id. art. II, § 1, cl.1 (“He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years. . . .”); id. art. I, § 6, cl.2 (“[N]o person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a member of either House. . . .”). Accordingly, by its plain terms, section 3 identifies a disqualification on who may take one of the enumerated offices, not on who may run for them.

Article I’s Qualifications Clauses for Members of Congress confirm this construction of section 3. For example, the provision for Senators states:

No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

Id. art. I, § 3, cl.3 (emphasis added); accord id. art. I, § 2, cl.2 (same for Representatives, except age requirement is “twenty five Years” and citizenship requirement is “seven Years”). These Qualifications Clauses thus prescribe requirements that must be satisfied at two specific times: age and citizenship requirements that must be satisfied only to “be” a Member of Congress, and a residency requirement that must be satisfied only “when elected” to Congress. Accordingly, Joe Biden was elected to the Senate when he was only 29 years old and turned 30 before he was sworn in to serve as a Senator. See <https://www.whitehouse.gov/administration/president-biden> (last visited Jan. 16, 2024). Likewise, candidates must establish residency in the State by Election Day, but need not be residents before then. See, e.g., Tex. Democratic Party, 459 F.3d at 589-90; Schaefer, 215 F.3d at 1037. Notably, Article I's Qualification Clauses impose no requirements that must be satisfied before Election Day.

Article I's Qualifications Clauses underscore that section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment imposes no limitations on covered persons' ability to run for office. Section 3 does not even impose any limitations that must be satisfied at the time "when elected," let alone months before Election Day when ballots are prepared. Instead, it bars covered persons only from "hold[ing]" the covered offices, U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3, and this textual difference must be given effect, see, e.g., McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316, 343-44 (1819) (holding that, because the Import-Export Clause uses the phrase "absolutely necessary," the Necessary & Proper Clause does not require absolute necessity).²

Moreover, the fact that section 3 does not restrict running for office is of particular importance because section 3 also creates a mechanism for removing any disqualification it imposes (unlike other constitutional provisions imposing categorical, non-waivable disqualifications from covered offices). In particular, section 3 vests plenary authority to do so in Congress: “But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.” U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. Critically, it places no limitation on when Congress may exercise that authority. It is thus impossible to say that a candidate for office is disqualified under section 3, because it is unknowable whether Congress will remove any disqualification before the candidate-elect takes office and section 3 kicks in.

² The Article II clause stating the primary qualifications for the Presidency—i.e., natural-born citizen; 35 years-old; U.S. resident for 14 years—phrases those as qualifications to "be eligible to" "the Office of President," U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5 (emphasis added), which is ambiguous about when they must be satisfied. As explained below, the Twentieth Amendment eliminates the ambiguity by clarifying that individuals who do not satisfy the qualifications for the office of President may still run for office and be elected, at least if they could satisfy those qualifications at some time during the Presidential term at issue.

In fact, shortly after section 3 was ratified, Congress removed section 3 disqualifications from candidates after they had prevailed in their elections. See, e.g., Cong. Globe, 40 Cong., 2 Sess., 4499 (July 25, 1868) (reported) (lifting section 3 disqualifications for several individuals elected to the House of Representatives); Cong. Globe, 40 Cong., 3 Sess., 13-14 (Dec. 7, 1868) (lifting section 3 disqualification of an individual who had been elected chief justice of South Carolina); Cong. Globe, 40 Cong., 3 Sess., 120-121 (Dec. 17, 1868) (lifting section 3 disqualifications for twelve individuals who had won elections in their states). As one Senator explained, “[i]t is necessary that the disabilities should be removed from these persons before the recess, in order to enable them to qualify for offices to which they have been elected before the 1st of January. . . . [T]hey are men who were selected by the votes of their several localities to fill important local offices.” Id. (statement of Senator Sawyer). Obviously, Congress could not have waited until after elections to remove the section 3 disqualification if that disqualification prohibited running for, and being elected to, office. And importantly, it would have disenfranchised the voters who elected these officials if they had been blocked from the ballot merely because Congress waited until after the elections to lift the disqualifications.

Finally, the Twentieth Amendment further buttresses this construction of section 3. The Twentieth Amendment addresses the possibility that a candidate could prevail in the Presidential election, become the President-elect, and yet not be qualified for the office of President come Inauguration Day. It directs: “If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified.” U.S. Const. amend. XX, § 3 (emphases added). Thus, for example, if a President-elect has not “been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States” on Inauguration Day, id. art. II, § 1, cl. 5, the Vice President-elect “shall act as President,” id. amend. XX § 3, until the President-elect satisfies the residency requirement. So, too, if a President-elect “shall have failed to qualify” to take office on Inauguration Day due to an alleged section 3 disqualification, he can later so “qualif[y],” id., when Congress “remove[s] such disability,” id. amend. XIV, § 3.

Read together, the Twentieth Amendment reinforces that even if section 3 imposes a disqualification from serving as President, it imposes no disqualification on seeking or even being elected to the office of President. The Twentieth Amendment also reinforces that Congress alone decides when, if at all, to remove any section 3 disqualification from a President-elect. Congress may, but need not, remove any section 3 disqualification from a Presidential candidate before he is elected. See id. amend. XIV, § 3; id. amend. XX, § 3; see also Act of May 22, 1872, ch. 193, 17 Stat. 142 (1872) (Amnesty Act applicable to future service in office); Act of June 6, 1898, ch. 389, 30 Stat. 432 (1898) (Amnesty Act applicable to future service in office). Congress may also do so before or after the President-elect's term begins, and in the latter scenario, the Vice President-elect serves as President until Congress removes the President-elect's disqualification or the term expires.

C. The Colorado Supreme Court Improperly Altered Section 3 And The Qualifications For The Office Of President

The Colorado Supreme Court erred when it twisted section 3 to alter the Constitution's qualifications for the office of President. In particular, based on its premise that President Trump "is disqualified from holding the office of President under" section 3, it reached the erroneous conclusion that the Secretary of State "may not list President Trump's name on the 2024 presidential primary ballot, nor may she count any write-in votes cast for him." Anderson v. Griswold, No. 23SA300, 2023 WL 8770111, at *51 ¶ 257 (Colo. Dec. 19, 2023).

The Colorado Supreme Court seemed to suggest that it was merely enforcing a section 3 disqualification against President Trump, see id. at *12 ¶ 55, *51 ¶ 257, but that suggestion is plainly incorrect. Because the Constitution prohibits States from “alter[ing] or add[ing] to” the Constitution’s qualifications for the office of President, States may not “in any manner change” those qualifications. U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 796, 799 (citing G. McCrary, American Law of Elections § 322 (4th ed. 1897)). And this prohibition on States “alter[ing]” the qualifications for federal office, id. at 796, extends to altering the time for satisfying the Constitution’s qualifications. For example, as noted, Article I’s Qualifications Clauses impose a residency requirement on prospective Members of Congress only at the time “when elected.” U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 2; id. art. I, § 3, cl. 3. Accordingly, the courts of appeals have held that States lack authority to require candidates for Congress to inhabit the State before being elected, because that effectively accelerates the date by which they must establish residency, notwithstanding the relative ease of doing so. See, e.g., Tex. Democratic Party, 459 F.3d at 589-90; Schaefer, 215 F.3d at 1037. So, too, do States lack authority to alter the time for satisfying the qualifications for the office of President, including any need to obtain removal of a section 3 disqualification by Congress. See, e.g., U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5; id. amend. XIV, § 3.

The Colorado Supreme Court’s decision altered the qualifications for the office of President in contravention of these rules. The plain “text” of Section 3, U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 787 n.2, makes clear that its disqualification applies only to serving in one of the enumerated offices, not to seeking them, see U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. But by invoking section 3 to exclude President Trump from the Republican Party's primary election ballot, the Colorado Supreme Court extended any section 3 disability beyond "be[ing]" President to also merely running for President. Compare U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3, with Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *51 ¶ 257. Far from enforcing the Constitution's qualifications for the Presidency—as occurs where States deny ballot access to candidates who are categorically barred from serving at all, see infra at 17—the Colorado Supreme Court altered the time for satisfying section 3. It effectively accelerated the date by which any section 3 disqualification may be removed by Congress, requiring that to occur before state primary elections that will take place many months prior to Inauguration Day. See Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *51 ¶ 257. Indeed, compared to state-imposed pre-election residency requirements for congressional candidates, the judgment of the Colorado Supreme Court is an even clearer violation of U.S. Term Limits: it involves the national office of the President, and it imposes a far more significant burden to deprive a candidate of valuable time to persuade Congress to remove any section 3 disqualification.

Relatedly, the Colorado Supreme Court's modification of section 3 improperly interferes with Congress's authority to decide when, if at all, to remove any section 3 disqualification from a President-elect. The Colorado Supreme Court effectively read state law to require Congress to exercise that authority before the Colorado court issued judgment in this case, see id., or at least by Colorado's January 5, 2024 statutory deadline for the Secretary to certify the names of candidates to be placed on the presidential primary ballot, see id. at *8 ¶ 39. It therefore left no room for placing President Trump on the primary election ballot if Congress were to remove any section 3 disqualification today or at some other point between now and the primary election. See id. at *51, ¶ 257. And it likewise thwarted Congress's prerogative to wait until after Election Day to remove any section 3 disqualification from a President-elect. See id.

This result is error, pure and simple. Congress can choose to remove any section 3 disability before Election Day, before Inauguration Day, or even during a President-elect's term. See U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3; see also id. amend. XX, § 3. Either the current Congress or the Congress set to take office on January 3, 2025, see id. amend. XX, § 1, has sole authority to decide when, if at all, to address a 2024 President-elect's section 3 disqualification. And either this Congress or the next may have a variety of political and institutional reasons for choosing to address the question at one time or another. As just one example, Congress may choose to await the outcome of the election before deciding whether to take action, as it has previously done. See supra at 9-10. As another, the current Congress may prefer to leave the question to the next Congress, which will count the results of the 2024 Electoral College. See 3 U.S.C. § 15.

To date, Congress has not taken up the question whether President Trump is under a section 3 disqualification. Whether and when to do so belongs to Congress alone, not the Colorado Supreme Court.

Yet the Colorado Supreme Court transformed Congress's decision not to act by the date of the state-court judgment into a new, unmet qualification for President Trump even to be a candidate and to receive votes in the Republican Party's upcoming primary election. The Colorado Supreme Court's decision contravenes the Constitution and the unanimous reasoning of this Court's decision in U.S. Term Limits.

D. The Colorado Supreme Court Misconstrued The Constitution And This Court's Precedents

The Colorado Supreme Court offered no persuasive basis for its erroneous treatment of the Constitution and Congress's section 3 authority. It first noted that this Court has reserved the question whether section 3 prescribes a "qualification" for federal office. See Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, *14 ¶ 65 (citing U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 787 n.2 and Powell, 395 U.S. at 520 n.41); but see id. (acknowledging that, regardless, the Constitution precludes States from imposing "additional qualifications for [federal] office") (citing U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 787 n.2) (emphasis original). That is a red herring, because the Colorado Supreme Court's judgment is premised on section 3 prescribing a qualification: the linchpin of its holding was its premise that "President Trump is disqualified from holding the office of President under Section Three." Id. at *51 ¶ 257 (emphasis added). Even if the court were correct on that point, it erred when it "alter[ed]" that qualification by accelerating the timeline for satisfying it. U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 787 n.2. Conversely, of course, if the court was not correct that section 3 imposes a qualification on the office of President, then its premise that “President Trump is disqualified,” Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *51 ¶ 257, fails and its entire holding collapses. Thus, on the Colorado Supreme Court’s own reasoning, this Court’s reservation of that question has no bearing on the outcome here: either way, reversal is warranted.

The Colorado Supreme Court next reasoned that “nothing in the U.S. Constitution expressly precludes states from limiting access to the presidential ballot to” candidates “who are constitutionally qualified to hold the office of President.” Id. at *12 ¶ 53 (emphasis in original). But that is plainly wrong. The Constitution does preclude States from “alter[ing] or add[ing] to” the qualifications for the office of President, including by extending those qualifications to candidates in a manner that accelerates the timeline for satisfying them. U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 796; see id. at 799 (may not “in any manner change” the qualifications). As discussed, this preclusion follows a fortiori from U.S. Term Limits and cases invalidating state-imposed pre-election residency requirements for congressional candidates. See supra at 5-6, 8-9. And the Colorado Supreme Court also missed the plain import of the fact that section 3 vests plenary authority in Congress to decide whether and when to remove any disqualification it imposes on a Presidential candidate or President-elect. In fact, the court noted that authority only in two quotations but never discussed it, much less reconciled it with the decision to preemptively exclude President Trump from the Republican Party’s primary election ballot. See Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *6 ¶ 26, *31 ¶ 151.

The Colorado Supreme Court likewise devoted just a few sentences to the Twentieth Amendment, deeming it inapplicable because “[b]y its express language,” it “applies post-election.” Id. at *25 ¶ 119. But that is entirely the point: the Twentieth Amendment addresses what happens in any period between Inauguration Day and an unqualified President-elect becoming qualified to take office. See U.S. Const. amend. XX, § 3. It therefore underscores that state courts do not police Presidential qualifications by denying ballot access to candidates who might be disqualified come Inauguration Day depending on intervening events. See id. Just as the Twentieth Amendment confirms that a State cannot block from the ballot a Presidential candidate who may not have satisfied the 14-year residency requirement until the day after Inauguration Day, it confirms that a state cannot block from the ballot a Presidential candidate who may well have any alleged section 3 disqualification removed before Inauguration Day (or even Election Day). And the Twentieth Amendment’s silence “about who determines in the first instance whether the President and Vice President are qualified to hold office,” Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *25 ¶ 119, does not authorize state courts to alter those qualifications, see, e.g., U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 783, 796.

The Colorado Supreme Court cited prior judicial decisions excluding Presidential candidates from the ballot due to failure to satisfy the Constitution’s qualifications for office, Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *12 ¶ 54, but each one is plainly distinguishable. None approved of altering a qualification rather than merely enforcing it. In two of the cases, the candidate was categorically disqualified from holding the office of President on a ground that could not be removed by the end of the Presidential term. See Hassan v. Colorado, 495 F. App'x 947, 948-49 (10th Cir. 2012) (Gorsuch, J.) (candidate was not “a natural born Citizen,” U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5); Lindsay v. Bowen, 750 F.3d 1061, 1065 (9th Cir. 2014) (candidate was only 27 years old and thus would not attain 35 years of age at any point during the Presidential term at issue, U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5). Accordingly, while the States enforced those disqualifications pre-election, that timing did not materially alter the qualifications, because the candidates had no means under the Constitution to cure the disqualification before the Presidential term would have expired. By contrast, here, the Colorado Supreme Court required President Trump to obtain removal of any section 3 disqualification many months before Inauguration Day, despite the fact that section 3 allows him to do so after the election. As for the third case, it offered no attempt at developed reasoning and did not address section 3 in any event. See Socialist Workers Party of Ill. v. Ogilvie, 357 F. Supp. 109, 113 (N.D. Ill. 1972). Thus, none of these cases supports the Colorado Supreme Court’s modification of the qualifications for the office of President or vitiation of Congress’s plenary authority to remove any Section 3 disqualification.

At the petition stage, the Anderson Respondents largely repeated the Colorado Supreme Court’s errors on this question. See BIO 11-12. Their sole additional argument—that the Colorado Supreme Court was just exercising the State’s power over the “manner” of appointing Presidential electors, id. at 11—is fundamentally incorrect. The unanimous conclusion in U.S. Term Limits that States cannot alter qualifications for the office of President obviously means that they cannot enact a law denying ballot access to electors for a candidate who does not satisfy the State's altered qualifications. Were the law otherwise, States could alter the qualifications for the office of President through the back door of ballot-access laws, in contravention of the Constitution and the views of all nine Justices in U.S. Term Limits.

Reversing the Colorado Supreme Court based on U.S. Term Limits would remedy the Colorado Supreme Court's constitutional errors in holding that President Trump cannot appear on the ballot or receive write-in votes in the Republican Party's primary election. It would eliminate the risk of the Colorado Supreme Court's decision touching off a patchwork of conflicting state-court ballot-access rulings across the country. It would also disentangle the courts from the political thicket of adjudicating any section 3 disputes unless and until they become ripe and justiciable, if at all, after Election Day. And it would rightfully return section 3 disqualification questions to Congress, preserving Congress's plenary authority over the substance and timing of section 3 disqualification-removal decisions. The Court should reverse.

II. THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT VIOLATED THE FIRST AMENDMENT

"It is well settled that partisan political organizations enjoy freedom of association protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments." Eu v. S.F. Cnty. Democratic Cent. Comm., 489 U.S. 214, 224

(1989). The First Amendment extends robust protection to “the freedom to join together in” political parties in “furtherance of common political beliefs.” Cal. Democratic Party v. Jones, 530 U.S. 567, 574 (2000).

Accordingly, “[t]he ability of the members of the Republican Party to select their own candidate unquestionably implicates an associational freedom” protected by the First Amendment. Id. at 575 (cleaned up). Indeed, “[r]epresentative democracy in any populous unit of government is unimaginable without the ability of citizens to band together in promoting among the electorate candidates who espouse their political views.” Id. at 574. In fact, “[i]n no area” is this fundamental First Amendment right “more important than in the [party’s] process of selecting its nominee” for office. Id. at 575.

After all, that process “often determines the party’s positions on the most significant public policy issues of the day” and in all events anoints the nominee as “the party’s ambassador to the general electorate in winning it over to the party’s views.” Id. In other words, “[t]he moment of choosing the party’s nominee . . . is the crucial juncture at which the appeal to common principles may be translated into concerted action, and hence to political power in the community.” Id. (cleaned up).

This Court’s cases thus “vigorously affirm the special place the First Amendment reserves for, and the special protection it accords, the process by which a political party selects a standard bearer who best represents the party’s ideologies and preferences.” Id. (cleaned up). This Court therefore has not hesitated to declare unconstitutional laws that interfere with the right of voters and their political party to select their own nominees for office. This includes laws requiring parties to conduct “an open presidential preference primary,” “blanket primary,” id. at 576-77, or closed primary, Tashjian v. Republican Party of Conn., 479 U.S. 208 (1986), a law requiring party delegates to vote at the national convention in accordance with the results of the primary election, see Democratic Party of U.S. v. Wis. ex rel La Follette, 450 U.S. 107, 125-26 (1981), and a law banning political parties from endorsing candidates in primary elections, see Eu, 489 U.S. at 216, 224-25.

As in such prior cases, the Colorado Supreme Court’s decision unconstitutionally “suffocates” the First Amendment rights of the Republican Party and its voters. Id. at 224. It holds that state law totally “ban[s]” Republican voters participating in the Republican Party’s Colorado primary election from voting to nominate President Trump either on the ballot or through a write-in vote, even though he may well be qualified to take office on Inauguration Day. Id.; see also Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *51 ¶ 257. It thus construes state law to interfere with the Republican Party’s “candidate-selection process” in Colorado, by preventing voters from “select[ing]” President Trump as the “standard bearer who best represents the party’s ideologies and preferences” in the State. Cal. Democratic Party, 530 U.S. at 568, 575. In these ways, the decision achieves the Colorado Supreme Court’s unconstitutional “intended outcome of changing the part[y’s] message” and candidate. Id. at 568.

Such burdens on the Republican Party also extend beyond Colorado. The Colorado Supreme Court's decision constitutes a "substantial intrusion into the associational freedom of members of the National Republican Party outside Colorado." Democratic Party of U.S., 450 U.S. at 126. Indeed, it construes state law to infringe the right of the national Republican Party and Republican voters across the country to select a single nationwide "standard bearer" and "ambassador to the general electorate in winning it over to the party's views" in the 2024 Presidential election. Cal. Democratic Party, 530 U.S. at 575; see also Grove v. Simon, No. A23-1354, 2023 WL 7392541, *1 (Minn. Nov. 8, 2023) (declining to exclude President Trump from the ballot in the Republican Party primary election, which "is an internal party election to serve internal party purposes").

These burdens on bedrock First Amendment rights are "severe." Cal. Democratic Party, 530 U.S. at 582. Indeed, these are "heavier burden[s] on" voters' and "a political party's associational freedom" than the burdens this Court has determined are severe in prior cases. Id.

The Colorado Supreme Court, however, made no effort to justify these burdens on First Amendment rights as "narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest." Id. Instead, it reasoned that States may limit "presidential primary ballot access to only qualified candidates." Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *16 ¶ 78. The Colorado Supreme Court may well have been correct if the disqualification at issue were one that could not be resolved during the next Presidential term of office, such as a candidate who is not “a natural born Citizen” of the United States. U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5; see Hassan, 495 F. App’x at 948-49. But it is not correct for any section 3 disqualification, which Congress has the plenary authority to remove at the time of its choosing. See U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 3. The Colorado Supreme Court provided no explanation of what interest the State has in preventing citizens from voting for a candidate whose alleged disqualification is subject to Congressional removal, let alone one sufficient to overcome the voters’ compelling First Amendment right to cast their ballots for the Presidential candidate of their choice. That failure is especially glaring here: the Colorado Supreme Court cannot justify its disenfranchisement of voters when it is impossible to know whether the alleged section 3 disqualification will be in place on Inauguration Day, much less throughout the next Presidential term.

Moreover, none of the four cases the Colorado Supreme Court cited supports its view that the Constitution permits limiting “primary ballot access” to candidates it concludes are free of a section 3 disqualification as of the date of its judgment. One of those cases disapproved on First Amendment grounds a Connecticut law prohibiting independent voters from voting in Republican primaries. See Tashjian, 479 U.S. at 210-11 (cited at Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *16 ¶ 75). Another enjoined enforcement of a ballot-access deadline on First Amendment grounds. See Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780 (1983) (cited at Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *16 ¶ 76). The third addressed a prohibition on write-in voting, not ballot access. See Burdick v. Takushi, 504

U.S. 428 (1992) (cited at Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *16 ¶ 76).

The final case, Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party (cited at Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *16 ¶¶ 73, 75, 77), concerned an access rule for the general election ballot, see 520 U.S. 351 (1997), which involves a different “juncture” in the election process than “[t]he moment of choosing the party’s nominee” through a primary election, Cal. Democratic Party, 530 U.S. at 575. Even then, Timmons did not ban a candidate from appearing on the general election ballot; instead, it upheld a ban on a political party redundantly placing on the ballot a candidate who already appeared as another party’s nominee. See 520 U.S. at 363. The party and its members therefore retained the right and opportunity to “campaign for, endorse, and vote for their preferred candidate,” id.—rights the Colorado Supreme Court has denied the Republican Party and its members in the upcoming Republican Party primary election, see Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *51 ¶ 257. Finally, to the extent Timmons made passing reference to denial of ballot access to candidates “ineligible for office,” it mentioned only eligibility for state elected office, not section 3 or any qualifications for federal office that may be removed by Congress during the President-elect’s term of office, 520 U.S. at 359 & n.8 (cited at Anderson, 2023 WL 8770111, at *16 ¶ 75). Timmons therefore provides no basis for the Colorado Supreme Court’s exclusion of President Trump from the Republican Party’s primary election ballot in violation of the right of “the members of the Republican Party to select their own candidate” for President. Cal. Democratic Party, 530 U.S. at 575.

CONCLUSION

The Court should reverse the judgment below.

JANUARY 2024

NOEL J. FRANCISCO

JOHN M. GORE

Counsel of Record

E. STEWART CROSLAND

HASHIM M. MOOPAN

JONES DAY

51 Louisiana Avenue, NW

Washington, DC 20001

(202) 879-3939

jmgore@jonesday.com

Counsel for Amici Curiae

RETRIEVED FROM DEMOCRACYDOCS.COM