

RACHEL WITTY
CIVIL DIVISION DIRECTOR

Margaret Paton Walsh
Laura Fox
Assistant Attorneys General
Department of Law
1031 West Fourth Avenue, Ste. 200
Anchorage, AK 99501
Telephone: (907) 269-6612
Facsimile: (907) 269-3697
Email: margaret.paton-walsh@alaska.gov
laura.fox@alaska.gov

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA

United States of America,

Plaintiff,

v.

State of Alaska; Carol Beecher, in her official capacity as Director of the Division of Elections of the State of Alaska; the Election Boards of the State of Alaska; and the State Ballot Counting
Review Board of the State of Alaska,

Defendants.

Case No. 3:26-cv-00376-SLG

DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Defendants Carol Beecher, in her official capacity as Director of the Division of Elections of the State of Alaska; the Election Boards of the State of Alaska; and the State Ballot Counting Review Board of the State of Alaska (collectively, "the Division") move the Court to dismiss the United States' complaint about Alaska's elections immediately, with prejudice, because the complaint has no legal basis.

Although Alaska faces an unusual situation in which two candidates for U.S. Senator share a first and last name, the Division has taken significant steps to distinguish them on the ballot so that voters can easily determine which candidate is which. Despite the lack of evidence of any problems (or indeed, any legal cause of action), the United States has sued to block certification of Alaska’s election result if “Senator Sullivan does not win the election.”¹ But the United States lacks authority to intervene in state elections at all, much less in support of a favored candidate. This Court should follow the well-established principle that “lower federal courts should not ‘alter the election rules’ of a state ‘on the eve of an election,’”² and swiftly dismiss the complaint.

BACKGROUND

I. Alaska’s election system

Alaska’s elections begin with an open, nonpartisan, top-four primary in which all candidates are listed on a single ballot and voters vote for their preferred candidate to advance to the general election.³ Although primary candidates may choose to have their registered political party affiliation indicated on the ballot, they are not competing to become party nominees.⁴ The four primary candidates receiving the most votes for an

¹ Dkt. 1 at 13, ¶ 42.

² People Not Politicians v. Onder, 609 U.S. ___, 2026 WL 2883222 (Sept. 25, 2026).

³ AS 15.25.010.

⁴ AS 15.25.030(a)(5).

office advance to the general election regardless of party affiliation, not as the nominees of any party, but as the successful nominees of the top-four primary.⁵

Then, in the general election, Alaska uses ranked-choice voting to determine the winner.⁶ Each voter can rank the four (or fewer) candidates for each office in order of preference, although the voter need not rank all the candidates.⁷ The Division of Elections begins the counting process by tabulating all the first-choice rankings.⁸ If any candidate gets more than half the first-choice rankings, the process is complete and that candidate is the winner.⁹ If no candidate gets more than half the first-choice rankings, the Division eliminates the candidate who got the fewest, and each ballot for that candidate is either reallocated to the voters' second-choice candidate,¹⁰ or, if the voter has not ranked other candidates, the ballot counts for the eliminated candidate in the final results and is not included in further rounds of tabulation.¹¹ This process repeats in rounds until only two candidates are left and one of those candidates wins.¹²

⁵ AS 15.25.100(a).

⁶ AS 15.15.350(c).

⁷ AS 15.25.010; AS 15.25.100(a); AS 15.58.020(13) ("For a general election, you must rank the candidates in the numerical order of your preference, ranking as many candidates as you wish.").

⁸ AS 15.15.350(d). If a voter does not fill in the first choice oval, the Division will count that voter's highest-ranked candidate as the voter's first choice. Id. ("highest-ranked continuing candidate").

⁹ AS 15.15.350(d).

¹⁰ AS 15.15.350(d)(2).

¹¹ AS 15.15.350(d)(2), .350(g)(2).

¹² AS 15.15.350(d)(1).

II. The 2026 elections

In Alaska's 2026 primary election, more than a dozen candidates filed to run for the office of United States Senator.¹³ Among those candidates were the incumbent, Senator Daniel S. Sullivan ("Dan S."), and an Alaskan from Petersburg named Daniel J. Sullivan, Jr. ("Daniel J."). When Daniel J. filed his declaration of candidacy, he changed his party affiliation from undeclared to Republican.¹⁴

After the Division received complaints challenging Daniel J.'s eligibility and became concerned that he had filed his declaration of candidacy with an intent to confuse and mislead voters, the Division determined him ineligible to run as a candidate in the primary election.¹⁵ But Daniel J. successfully appealed this determination: the Alaska Supreme Court affirmed a superior court order directing the Division to include Daniel J. as a candidate on the primary ballot.¹⁶ The Alaska Supreme Court remanded to the ¹³ See State of Alaska, 2026 Primary Election, Election Summary Report, Official Results, <https://www.elections.alaska.gov/enr26/results/ElectionSummaryReportRPT.pdf> (Aug. 18, 2026).

¹⁴ Dkt. 1 at 6-7, ¶ 23(b).

¹⁵ See Sullivan v. State, Div. of Elections, Order on Administrative Appeal at 5, 3AN-26-07485CI (Alaska Super. Ct. June 26, 2026), available at <https://public.courts.alaska.gov/web/media/MRCF/3AN-26-07485CI/order2.pdf>

¹⁶ See State, Division of Elections v. Sullivan, Order, S-19935 (Alaska Supreme Ct., June 29, 2026), available at <https://appellate-records.courts.alaska.gov/CMSPublic/UserControl/OpenDocument?q=2ubl5dCVeEArChBN5bdIzg==%27>

Division to “determine, in the first instance, how [Daniel J.] shall be listed as a candidate within the confines of existing Alaska ballot design law.”¹⁷

To ensure that the appearance of two Daniel Sullivans on the ballot would not confuse voters, the Division designed the ballot to distinguish them as much as possible. The Division included on the ballot (1) the two men’s different middle initials, (2) the “Jr.” that differentiates Daniel J.’s name, (3) the shortened version of the senator’s name, “Dan,” but the other man’s full first name, “Daniel,” (4) Dan S.’s longstanding Republican affiliation but not Daniel J.’s newfound Republican affiliation, and (5) the word “Incumbent” alongside Dan S.’s name to identify him as the current senator:

¹⁷ Id.

United States Senator (Vote for one)
☐	Darden, Dustin Thomas House (Registered Republican)
☐	Grauberger, Fred C. (Registered Republican)
☐	Grayson, Richard (Registered Green)
☐	Hafner, Carol "Kitty" (Registered Democrat)
☐	Heikes, Gerald L. (Registered Republican)
☐	Hill, Sidney "Sid" (Undeclared)
☐	Kohlhaas, Scott A. (Registered Libertarian)
☐	Leslie, David B. (Registered Democrat)
☐	Mayers, Richard B. (Registered Republican)
☐	McElwain, Heather (Registered Republican)
☐	Peltola, Mary (Registered Democrat)
☐	Roberts, Reece J. (Nonpartisan)
☐	Saucerman, Shirley A. (Nonpartisan)
☐	Southworth, Earl O. "Skip" (Registered Alaskan Party)
☐	Sullivan, Daniel J. Jr.
☐	Sullivan, Dan S. (Registered Republican) Incumbent

The primary ballots were printed accordingly, without legal challenge, and the primary election went forward on August 18.¹⁸ The top four candidates in the primary were Mary Peltola, Dan S., Daniel J., and Gerald Heikes.¹⁹ The general election ballots

¹⁸ See State of Alaska Official Ballot, Primary Election (Aug. 18, 2026), available at <https://www.elections.alaska.gov/election/2026/Primary/SampleBallots/HD1.pdf>.

¹⁹ See Dkt. 1 at 9 ¶ 31; see also State of Alaska, 2026 Primary Election, Election Summary Report, Official Results, were printed with their names in September, and early voting began in mid-October. The general election ballot similarly differentiates between Dan S. and Daniel J.:

United States Senator
	1st Choice	2nd Choice	3rd Choice	4th Choice	5th Choice
Heikes, Gerald L. (Registered Republican)	☐ 1	☐ 2	☐ 3	☐ 4	☐ 5
Peltola, Mary (Registered Democrat)	☐ 1	☐ 2	☐ 3	☐ 4	☐ 5
Sullivan, Daniel J. Jr.	☐ 1	☐ 2	☐ 3	☐ 4	☐ 5
Sullivan, Dan S. (Registered Republican) Incumbent	☐ 1	☐ 2	☐ 3	☐ 4	☐ 5
Write-in:	☐ 1	☐ 2	☐ 3	☐ 4	☐ 5

If any Sullivan-supporting voter remains uncertain which Sullivan is which despite this clear differentiation on the ballot, the voter can ask for assistance from others²⁰ or look up information about the candidates using a smart phone or an election pamphlet. And if the voter is still uncertain, Alaska's ranked-choice voting system provides another solution: the voter can rank the Sullivans as his first and second choices. That way, if the voter's first-ranked Sullivan is eliminated, his vote would transfer to the other Sullivan. The voter's vote would not "be transferred to Peltola" as the complaint asserts, unless the voter chose to rank Peltola as his next choice instead of the other Sullivan.²¹

More than two months after the primary election—and less than two weeks before general election day—the United States filed this lawsuit. Meanwhile, many Alaskans have already cast general election ballots via absentee or early voting.

<https://www.elections.alaska.gov/enr26/results/ElectionSummaryReportRPT.pdf> (Aug. 18, 2026).

²⁰ See AS 15.15.240.

²¹ Dkt. 1 at 10, § 33.

LEGAL STANDARD

When considering a motion to dismiss, the Court should “accept all factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe the pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.”²² A motion to dismiss should be granted “when the complaint fails to state sufficient facts creating a plausible claim to relief.”²³

ARGUMENT

I. The United States lacks standing to bring this suit.

The United States lacks standing because Alaska’s administration of its elections is not harming the United States. In fact, the relief it requests would cause the harm the United States says it wants to avoid by undermining confidence in the election.

The United States must establish three elements to have standing: first, it must have “suffered an ‘injury in fact’—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) ‘actual or imminent, not “conjectural” or “hypothetical.””²⁴ Second, it must establish “a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of—the injury has to be ‘fairly ... trace[able] to the challenged action of the defendant, and not ... th[e] result [of] the independent action of some third party not before the court.’”²⁵ Third, the United States must demonstrate redressability—

²² Heineke v. Santa Clara Univ., 965 F.3d 1009, 1012 (9th Cir. 2020) (quoting Kniesel v. ESPN, 393 F.3d 1068, 1072 (9th Cir. 2005)).

²³ Moore v. Trader Joe's Co., 4 F.4th 874, 880 (9th Cir. 2021) (citing Kroessler v. CVS Health Corp., 977 F.3d 803, 807 (9th Cir. 2020)).

²⁴ Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992).

²⁵ Id.

i.e. it “must show that it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that its injury will be redressed by a favorable decision” from the Court.²⁶ The United States’ complaint does not satisfy any of these three steps.

First, the United States has suffered no injury in fact. Even assuming it “suffers an injury in fact whenever federal law is violated,”²⁷ the complaint does not allege a violation of any federal law. As explained below, the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA)—the only federal law cited in the complaint—imposes no requirements related to ballot access, ballot counting, or state certification procedures. Nor does a “frivolous candidacy” in a state election injure the United States.²⁸ The United States has no legal authority over how candidates secure their place on the ballot in state elections; only the federal constitution’s qualifications clause constrains a state’s rules.²⁹ And the United States also has no legally cognizable interest in securing a particular election outcome.³⁰

Second, the United States has not established a causal connection between any alleged conduct of the defendants and any purported injury. The defendants have taken every legally available step to minimize voter confusion by clearly differentiating the two ²⁶ Id. at 561. See also Bernhardt v. County of Los Angeles, 279 F.3d 862, 869 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 181 (2000)).

²⁷ Dkt. 1 at 5, ¶ 16.

²⁸ Id.

²⁹ U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 805 (1995).

³⁰ See Dkt. 1 at 13, ¶ 42.

Sullivans on the ballot. And the results of the primary election suggest that Alaska voters had no trouble identifying the senator when they wished to vote for him.³¹

To the extent that the United States' causation theory rests not on what the defendants are doing now, but rather on what they've already done in the past or might do in the future, it suffers from mootness or ripeness problems. If the "challenged action"³² was including Daniel J. on the ballot in the first place, now is too late. The Alaska Supreme Court ordered that Daniel J. be included, the Division was bound by that decision, and no timely challenges were brought to how the Division chose to implement that decision. Not only have ballots been printed and mailed out to absentee voters, but early in-person voting has begun.³³ If the United States wanted to keep Daniel J. off the ballot, it should have intervened in the earlier litigation over that issue. Alternatively, if the "challenged action" is the future certification of the election result—but only in the event that Senator Sullivan loses—this claim is not yet ripe and may never become so.

Third and finally, the United States' asserted injury will not be redressed by the relief requested. To the contrary, the relief requested would cause the very injury that the United States seeks to avoid by sowing confusion and eroding trust in Alaska's election result a week before Election Day. The requested declaration that the result cannot ³¹ See Dkt. 1 at 9, ¶ 31 (alleging that Daniel J. and the Senator received 2.5% and 41.4% of the votes, respectively, rather than the nearly equal number of votes they would likely have received if voters had been unable to correctly identify the Senator).

³² Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992).

³³ See, e.g., AS 15.20.064(a).

lawfully be certified if “impacted by voter confusion” (defined to mean that a particular candidate does not win) will not help protect election integrity.³⁴ Nor could the injunctive relief that the complaint apparently seeks³⁵ do so. Delaying certification of Alaska’s election results—but only if a particular candidate does not win—would interfere with state election administration and threaten election integrity.

Worse, the United States contemplates an open-ended “investigation” that would violate ballot secrecy: it requests “an investigation to determine whether votes cast for Daniel J. Sullivan were meant to be cast for Senator Sullivan and any further procedures or relief this Court deems necessary and appropriate to determine what the result would have been absent Daniel J. Sullivan’s inclusion on the ballot.”³⁶ This would gravely threaten the integrity of the electoral process. It would require segregating ballots cast for Daniel J. and identifying them with the voters who cast them, so that those voters could later be interrogated about their intent. But that is not possible. Like every state in the union, Alaska protects the secrecy of the ballot by law,³⁷ and such an investigation would require violating that secrecy. This would directly undermine electoral integrity.

³⁴ Dkt. 1 at 13 ¶ 43.

³⁵ The United States’ prayer for relief includes two paragraphs. The first asks for declaratory relief. The second lacks an introductory verb, but appears intended to request an injunction preventing the Division from certifying the election result in specified circumstances. Dkt. 1 at 13, ¶¶ 43-44.

³⁶ Dkt. 1 at 13 ¶ 44.

³⁷ Alaska Const. art. V, § 3 (“Secrecy of voting shall be preserved.”).

Because the complaint fails to establish any of the three requirements for Article III standing—injury, causation, or redressability—the Court should dismiss the complaint pursuant to Federal Civil Rule 12(b)(1).

II. The United States fails to state a claim for violation of the National Voter Registration Act.

The Court should also dismiss the United States’ complaint under Federal Civil Rule 12(b)(6) because it fails to state a cause of action. The National Voter Registration Act (NVRA)—a voter registration law—has no relevance to the two-Sullivan issue.

The complaint alleges a single count under the NVRA, citing two provisions: 52 U.S.C. §§ 20501(b)(3) and 20510(a). Neither of these provisions imposes any obligations on the defendants, much less any that they are alleged to have violated. On the contrary, the NVRA says nothing at all about ballot access, ballot design, ballot counting, election certification, or any of the issues discussed in the complaint.

The United States alleges that “[t]he NVRA imposes a variety of duties on States for the purpose of ‘protect[ing] the integrity of the electoral process,’”³⁸ but it fails to mention that those “duties” all relate to voter registration.³⁹ The complaint contains no allegations about voter registration.⁴⁰

Instead, the United States asserts alleged violation of the “findings and purposes” of the NVRA to justify its exercise of civil enforcement authority. It cites 52 U.S.C.

³⁸ Dkt. 1 at 11, ¶ 37.

³⁹ See 52 U.S.C. §§ 20503—20509.

⁴⁰ See Dkt. 1 generally.

§ 20501, which contains the NVRA’s “findings and purposes,” coupled with 52 U.S.C. § 20510(a), which authorizes the Attorney General to “bring a civil action...for such declaratory or injunctive relief as is necessary to carry out this chapter.”⁴¹

The NVRA’s “findings” and “purposes,” like the act’s substantive provisions, all focus on voter registration and participation. The “findings” include that “the right of citizens of the United States to vote is a fundamental right,”⁴² that “it is the duty of the Federal, State, and local governments to promote the exercise of that right,”⁴³ and that “discriminatory and unfair registration laws and procedures can have a direct and damaging effect on voter participation...”⁴⁴ Similarly, the NVRA’s “purposes” are:

- (1) to establish procedures that will increase the number of eligible citizens who register to vote in elections for Federal office;
- (2) to make it possible for Federal, State, and local governments to implement this chapter in a manner that enhances the participation of eligible citizens as voters in elections for Federal office;
- (3) to protect the integrity of the electoral process; and
- (4) to ensure that accurate and current voter registration rolls are maintained.⁴⁵

Ignoring the NVRA’s clear focus on voter registration, the United States plucks the third listed purpose out of context (52 U.S.C. § 20501(b)(3)) and argues that it

⁴¹ 52 U.S.C. § 20510(a) (emphasis added).

⁴² 52 U.S.C. § 20501(a)(1).

⁴³ 52 U.S.C. § 20501(a)(2).

⁴⁴ 52 U.S.C. § 20501(a)(3).

⁴⁵ 52 U.S.C. § 20501(b).

imposes a freestanding duty on the states to “protect the integrity of the electoral process,” untethered from any specific requirement of the NVRA or even the general subject of voter registration. It does no such thing. It is “well established” that such declarations “of purposes and policy” do not “create substantive or enforceable rights.”⁴⁶

The only other provision the United States cites (52 U.S.C. § 20510(a)) is just an enforcement section authorizing suits for “declaratory or injunctive relief” to “carry out” the NVRA.⁴⁷ It does not confer a freestanding authority on the Attorney General to sue for reasons unconnected to any substantive provision of the NVRA.

No legal authority supports the United States’ untenable reading of the NVRA; the United States offers none; and this Court should immediately reject it. The United States’ reading would transform the NVRA from a voter registration law into a limitless grant of authority for federal interference in state-run elections. A vague aspirational statement in the NVRA’s purpose section (combined with the act’s authorization for the Attorney General to bring civil enforcement actions) cannot somehow permit the federal government to challenge any election process in any state or jurisdiction regardless of its connection—or lack thereof—to voter registration. That expansive reading contravenes the major questions doctrine, which rejects the idea that Congress would delegate “‘highly consequential power’ through ambiguous language.”⁴⁸

⁴⁶ Bear Valley Mut. Water Co. v. Jewell, 790 F.3d 977, 987 (9th Cir. 2015); see also Commonwealth v. Biden, 57 F.4th 545, 551 (6th Cir. 2023) (“The proposition that prologues, prefatory clauses, and purpose statements do not confer legal powers, rights, or duties is hardly controversial.”); National Wildlife Federation v. Marsh, 721 F.2d 767, 773 (11th Cir. 1983) (“Preambles to statutes do not impose substantive rights, duties or obligations.”), abrogated in part on other grounds by Marsh v. Oregon Natural Resources Council, 490 U.S. 360 (1989); Kingdomware Techs., Inc. v. United States, 579 U.S. 162, 173 (2016) (“[P]refatory clauses or preambles cannot change the scope of the operative clause.”) (citing Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. Co. v. Thomas, 132 U.S. 174, 188 (1889)).

⁴⁷ 52 U.S.C. § 20510(a).

And even if the NVRA did empower the United States to sue over any perceived threat to “the integrity of the electoral process”—which it does not—the facts stated in the complaint fail to allege any threat. The complaint shows the five ways that the general election ballot design clearly distinguishes the two Sullivans.⁴⁹ If any voter remains confused, Alaska law allows voters to receive assistance from others.⁵⁰ And if the voter is still uncertain, he can rank both Sullivans as his first and second choices under Alaska’s ranked-choice voting system so that his vote will count for either Sullivan over any other candidate. The complaint speculates that a confused voter wishing to vote for the senator “might not rank Senator Sullivan at all,” but alleges no facts to support the speculation that such voters exist in large numbers. The complaint thus fails to allege any threat to “the integrity of the electoral process” in Alaska, even if such a threat could support a cause of action under the NVRA.

⁴⁸ Learning Resources, Inc. v. Trump, 607 U.S. 229, 230 (2026).

⁴⁹ Dkt. 1 at 10.

⁵⁰ AS 15.15.240.

Because the allegations in the complaint do not support the United States' claim that the Division has violated the NVRA—or any other federal law—the complaint fails to state a claim for relief and must be dismissed under Federal Civil Rule 12(b)(6).

III. This lawsuit and the relief requested violate the Elections Clause.

Not only does complaint fail to state a claim under the NVRA, but this lawsuit is also inconsistent with this country's federal constitutional structure.

The Elections Clause of the United States Constitution provides that “[t]he Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations.”⁵¹ This means the Constitution “invests the States with responsibility for the mechanics of congressional elections” unless Congress legislates to preempt state choices.⁵² Because Congress has not done that here, the issues raised in the complaint remain the State of Alaska's business, not the United States's.

As the D.C. District Court has observed, the Constitution's “allocation of authority over federal elections between Congress and the States” is “no accident,” but rather was “the product of carefully considered compromises among our Constitution's Framers.”⁵³ The “diffusion of power” between Congress and the states was intended to “preserve and ⁵¹ U.S. Const. Art. I, § 4, cl. 1.

⁵² Foster v. Love, 522 U.S. 67, 69 (1997).

⁵³ League of United Latin Am. Citizens v. Exec. Off. of President, 808 F. Supp. 3d 29, 44 (D.D.C. 2025), aff'd sub nom. League of United Latin Am. Citizens v. Exec. Off. of the President, No. 25-5476, 2026 WL 1991571 (D.C. Cir. July 2, 2026).

restore to the people their equal and sacred rights of election” against “the influence of ambitious or popular characters, or in times of popular commotion, and when faction and party spirit run high.”⁵⁴ The President was not given a role in regulating elections; “[e]xecutive regulatory authority over federal elections does not appear to have crossed the Framers’ minds.”⁵⁵ So “[t]he States have initial authority to regulate elections,” and then “Congress has supervisory authority over those regulations.”⁵⁶

Here, Congress has passed no statute addressing any facet of the circumstances discussed in the complaint: no statute about similar-named candidates, no statute about preventing voter confusion, and no statute about questionable candidate motives. Nor has Congress passed a statute authorizing the kind of relief requested here, which is to delay state certification of an election result pending an open-ended “investigation.” The United States is asking this Court to create and apply rules that Congress never enacted. This is unlawful: Congress’s power to regulate elections supersedes state law only “so far as it is exercised, and no farther.”⁵⁷ Here, Congress has not exercised its power at all.

⁵⁴ Id. (quoting The Massachusetts Convention: Convention Debates (Jan. 16, 1788)).

⁵⁵ Id.

⁵⁶ Id.

⁵⁷ Watson v. Republican Nat’l Comm., 609 U.S. 672, 697 (2026) (quoting Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 386 (1879)).

The cases that the United States invokes about voter confusion—Bullock v. Carter,⁵⁸ Jenness v. Fortson,⁵⁹ and *Lindsay v. Bowen*⁶⁰—only confirm that this is an issue for the State to deal with, not the federal government. Bullock and Jenness explain that “a State has a legitimate interest in regulating the number of candidates on the ballot” to “prevent the clogging of its election machinery” and “avoid voter confusion.”⁶¹ None of these cases holds that states must do this, much less do it in any specified way. In fact, Bullock disallowed Texas’s unduly high filing fees, thus placing outer limits on states’ power to exclude purportedly non-serious candidates from the ballot.⁶² As for Lindsay, it held only that a state may keep an unqualified candidate off its ballot without violating free association or equal protection.⁶³ None of these cases held that a state must exclude particular kinds of candidates from the ballot, or that the United States can force a state to attempt to retroactively undo a candidate’s participation after the fact.

Not only has Congress not exercised its supervisory power over state election rules in any way relevant here, but even Congress couldn’t necessarily authorize the unusual and drastic remedy that the United States seeks, which is a rule indefinitely halting ⁵⁸ 405 U.S. 135, 145 (1972).

⁵⁹ 403 U.S. 431, 442 (1971).

⁶⁰ 750 F.3d 1061, 1064 (9th Cir. 2014).

⁶¹ Bullock, 405 U.S. at 145 (1972) (quoting Jenness, 403 U.S. at 442) (emphasis added).

⁶² See id. at 145–49.

⁶³ Lindsay, 750 F.3d at 1064–65.

certification of an election result but only if a specific, favored candidate “does not win.”⁶⁴ “[T]he Framers understood the Elections Clause as a grant of authority to issue procedural regulations, and not as a source of power to dictate electoral outcomes, to favor or disfavor a class of candidates, or to evade important constitutional restraints.”⁶⁵ The relief sought here would go well beyond appropriate procedural regulation. But regardless of whether Congress could authorize it, Congress certainly has not done so.

The United States’ requested interference with state election administration thus contravenes the Elections Clause, providing another reason to dismiss this suit.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the Court should promptly dismiss the complaint with prejudice so that Alaska can proceed to administer its elections consistent with state and federal law and without unwarranted interference by the United States.

DATED: October 26, 2026.

RACHEL WITTY
CIVIL DIVISION DIRECTOR

By: /s/ Margaret Paton Walsh
Margaret Paton Walsh
Laura Fox
Assistant Attorneys General
Department of Law
1031 West Fourth Avenue, Ste. 200
Anchorage, AK 99501
Telephone: (907) 269-6612

⁶⁴ See Dkt. 1 at 12–13 ¶¶ 42–44 (seeking injunctive relief in circumstances limited to where “Senator Sullivan does not win the election”).

⁶⁵ U.S. Term Limits, 514 U.S. at 833–34.

Facsimile: (907) 269-3697
Email: margaret.patonwalsh@alaska.gov
laura.fox@alaska.gov

Attorneys for Defendants

Certificate of Service

I hereby certify that on October 26, 2026, I filed a true and correct copy of the foregoing document with the Clerk of the Court for the United States District Court of Alaska by using the CM/ECF system. Participants in this Case No. 3:26-cv-00376-SLG who are registered CM/ECF users will be served by the CM/ECF system.

/s/Margaret Paton Walsh

Margaret Paton Walsh, Chief Assistant Attorney General

RETRIEVED FROM DEMOCRACYDOCKET.COM